

DELHI UNIVERSITY
LIBRARY

ARTS LIBRARY
(DELHI UNIVERSITY LIBRARY S

Cl. No. 0:1149326 93

Ac. No. 23500

This book should be returned on or before the date below, An overdue charge of 10 paise will be levied for each day the book is kept overtime.

A list of other titles in the Phoenix Library will be found at the end of this book

THE POEMS
" "
OF
WILFRED OWEN
" "

Edited
with a memoir and notes
by
EDMUND BLUNDEN

" "

---

CHATTO AND WINDUS
LONDON

Poems by Wilfred Owen with an introduction by Siegfried Sassoon was first published in 1920 and reprinted in 1921.

The complete edition of The Poems of Wilfred Owen, edited by Edmund Blunden, was first published in 1931.

First issued, with corrections, in the Phoenix Library

1933

Contents

|   |    |
|---|----|
| MEMOIR BY EDMUND BLUNDEN                      | I  |
| FROM MY DIARY, JULY 1914                      | 45 |
| THE UNRETURNING                               | 46 |
| TO EROS                                       | 47 |
| MY SHY HAND                                   | 48 |
| STORM   | 49 |
| MUSIC   | 50 |
| SHADWELL STAIR                                | 51 |
| HAPPINESS                                     | 52 |
| EXPOSURE                                      | 53 |
| FRAGMENT: "CRAMPED IN THAT FUNNELLEDHOLE" | 55 |
| FRAGMENT: "IT IS NOT DEATH"                   | 56 |
| THE PARABLE OF THE OLD MEN AND THEYOUNG   | 57 |
| ARMS AND THE BOY                              | 58 |
| THE SHOW                                      | 59 |
| THE SEND-OFF                                  | 61 |
| 'GREATER LOVE                                 | 62 |
| 'INSENSIBILITY                                | 63 |
| DULCE ET DECORUM EST                          | 66 |
| THE DEAD-BEAT                                 | 67 |
| THE CHANCES                                   | 68 |

|                                |     |
|--------------------------------|-----|
| ASLEEP                         | 69  |
| S. I. W.                       | 70  |
| MENTAL CASES                   | 72  |
| FUTILITY                       | 73  |
| CONSCIOUS                      | 74  |
| DISABLED                       | 75  |
| SONNET                         | 77  |
| SONNET                         | 78  |
| 'THE FATES                     | 79  |
| ANTHEM FOR DOOMED YOUTH | 80  |
| THE NEXT WAR                   | 81  |
| SONG OF SONGS                  | 82  |
| ALL SOUNDS HAVE BEEN AS MUSIC  | 83  |
| VOICES                         | 84  |
| APOLOGIA PRO POEMATE MEO       | 85  |
| À TERRE                        | 87  |
| WILD WITH ALL REGRETS          | 90  |
| 'WINTER SONG                   | 92  |
| HOSPITAL BARGE AT CÉRISY       | 93  |
| SIX O'CLOCK IN PRINCES STREET  | 94  |
| THE ROADS ALSO                 | 95  |
| THIS IS THE TRACK              | 96  |
| THE CALLS                      | 97  |
| MINERS                         | 98  |
| AND I MUST GO                  | 100 |
| THE PROMISERS                  | 101 |
| TRAINING                       | 102 |
| THE KIND GHOSTS                | 103 |

|                             |     |
|-----------------------------|-----|
| TO MY FRIEND                | 104 |
| INSPECTION                  | 105 |
| FRAGMENT: A FAREWELL        | 106 |
| FRAGMENT: THE ABYSS OF WAR  | 107 |
| AT A CALVARY NEAR THE ANCRE | 108 |
| LE CHRISTIANISME            | 109 |
| SPRING OFFENSIVE            | 110 |
| THE SENTRY                  | 112 |
| SMILE, SMILE, SMILE         | 114 |
| THE END                     | 115 |
| 'STRANGE MEETING            | 116 |
| NOTES                       | 119 |
| APPENDIX                    | 131 |

MEMOIR

MEMOIR (1931)

Twelve years of uneasy peace have passed since the War, among its final victims, took Wilfred Owen, and ten since the choice edition of his poems by his friend Siegfried Sassoon revealed to lovers of poetry and the humanities how great a glory had departed. It is impossible to become deeply acquainted with Owen's work and not to be haunted by comparisons between his genius and his premature death and the wonder and tragedy of his admired Keats. The sense of his promise and achievement has deepened since 1920, and his former editor has been conspicuous among those who have urged the preparation of a new and enlarged volume of Owen's poems, with such biographical notice as can and should be prefixed to them. The reader, who has in his hands a collection of poems by Owen more than twice as extensive as the previous one, will share the present editor's feelings of gratitude to Mrs. Owen and to Mr. Sassoon, who have made the volume possible by the careful preservation and liberal communication of the manuscripts, and whatever documents provided the substance of the memoir. Mrs. Owen, in sending a store of Owen's early notebooks and loose papers for this book, mentions an episode not unfamiliar in the lives of true poets, yet occasioning some natural tears to the devotee of this poet: "He gave me a sack full to burn once, with strict orders 'not to reserve a sheet'. I of course did as he wished—tho' it was like burning my heart."

There survives, however, a quantity of manuscript by Owen, which he had no leisure to organize. Much of it represents the early period of his enthusiasm for poetry, when he was finding his own way to the secrets of style, and discovering the forms of verse on which he would build up his own House Beautiful. These papers are chiefly remarkable as picturing the isolation in which a poet discerns that he is a poet, the delight and difficulty of the high calling to which he finds himself born, and the fruitful uses of practice in thought and its richest verbal presentation. In them, the young Owen is, without knowing it, the guarantor of the eventual poet who, plunged into the abysses of the breaking of nations, has skill to speak. Their fancies, devices, luxuries, concords enabled him to meet the shocks and amazements of immense suffering with the courage of a masterly artist. But I digress too soon and too widely. Early and late, Owen was a productive poet, and that fact, coupled with the fate that denied him opportunity to decide his own poetry, makes the task of editing his manuscripts complicated. Ideas, images, and musical hints rose up in his mind so fast that many of his poems exist in several versions, of which the ultimate "fair copy" is not to be certainly separated. In reconsidering this problem, and in offering the reader the text and notes before him, I must pay my tribute to the earlier care and insight of Mr. Sassoon, who, it will be remembered, expressed his indebtedness in the preparation of his edition to Miss Edith Sitwell.

Wilfred Owen was born at Plas Wilmot, Oswestry, on March 18, 1893. Another town in which Owen's name is honoured, while the details of his association are scanty, is Liverpool; and there we know at least the association that he was educated at the Birkenhead Institute. Perhaps, to us who bless him for his poetry, the epoch-making event of his boyhood was a visit to Broxton by the Hill. "Wilfred", his mother informs me, "must have been about ten years old when I took him for a holiday to Broxton"; and a passage that he wrote about ten years after that tells us the rest,

For I fared back into my life's arrears
 Even the weeks at Broxton, by the Hill,
 Where first I felt my boyhood fill
 With uncontainable movements; there was born
 My poethood.

Some additional words on his childhood from his mother will be welcomed: "He was always a very thoughtful, imaginative child—not very robust, and never cared for games. As a little child his greatest pleasure was for me to read to him even after he could read himself."

When he was thirteen or fourteen, he showed clearly the fascination that poetry had for him. He was also a passionate acquirer of learning. His choice of acquaintance through life depended on the soundness and value of what he could learn from those he met; as Bacon puts it, "a full man" pleased him. His father twice took him to Brittany between his fourteenth year and his sixteenth; there he seized every chance of conversation with French people, and was discontented only when the time came to return home. He could not have guessed that he should live to cry out, "I shall never again beg father to take me to France!"

In 1910 he matriculated at the London University. By that time he had become (with great diffidence, in fear and trembling almost) a writer of verses, and was deep in the work of Keats and others, but particularly Keats. His own verses of such an early date supply an engaging record of that dominant devotion. Their intrinsic merits are not my object in quoting them. A sonnet, entitled "Written in a Wood, September 1910", stands thus:

Full ninety autumns hath this ancient beech
 Helped with its myriad leafy tongues to swell
 The dirges of the deep-toned western gale,
 And ninety times hath all its power of speech
 Been stricken dumb, at sound of winter's yell,

Since Adonais, no more strong and hale,
 Might have rejoiced to linger here and teach
 His thoughts in sonnets to the listening dell;
 Or glide in fancy through those leafy grots
 And bird-pavilions hung with arras green,
 To hear the sonnets of its minstrel choir.
 Ah, ninety times again, when autumn rots,
 Shall birds and leaves be mute and all unseen,
 Yet shall Keats' voice sing on and never tire.
 Yet shall I see fair Keats, and hear his lyre.

Another sonnet, dated April 21, 1911, was "written at Teignmouth, on a Pilgrimage to Keats's House"; and in it, with imaginative distinction, the young pilgrim speaks his contentment in a day when the sea seemed to share his proud grief for one "whose name was writ on water". In the summer of 1912, Owen followed Keats in a twofold way by writing a poem "On Seeing a Lock of Keats's Hair", of which this is the final stanza:

It is a lock of Adonais' hair!
 I dare not look too long; nor try to tell
 What glories I see glistening, glistening there.
 The unanointed eye cannot perceive their spell.
 Turn ye to Adonais; his great spirit seek.
 O hear him; he will speak!

But this innocent idolatry did not exclude other influences. One warm day in December 1911 he wrote a letter in verse, from somewhere in Oxfordshire.

Full springs of Thought around me rise
 Like Rivers Four to water my fair garden.
 Eastwards, where lie wide woodlands, rich as Arden,
 From out the beechen solitudes hath sprung
 A stream of verse from aerial Shelley's tongue,
 While, as he drifted on between the banks
 Of happy Thames, the waters 'neath the planks
 Of his light boat gurgled contentedly
 And ever with his dreams kept company.
 To-day, the music of the slow, turmoiling river,

The music of the rapid vision-giver,
To me are vocal both.

To eastward, too,

A churchyard sleeps, and one infirm old yew,
Where in the shadows of the fading day,
Musing on faded lives, sate solemn Gray.
There to majestic utterance his soul was wrought,
And still his mighty chant is fraught
With golden teaching for the world, and speaks
Strong things with sweetness unto whoso seeks.
Yet can I never sit low at his feet
And, questioning, a gracious answer meet.
For he is gone, and his high dignity Lost in the past (tho' he may haply be Far in Futurity as well).

To North

Are hills where Arnold wandered forth
Which, like his verse, still undulate in calm
And tempered beauty.

And the marriage-psalm

Was sung o'er Tennyson, small space away.

This rhyming letter has something still more intimate, for, towards its close, Owen declares his longing for a new great poet—for all of us, and himself:

Let me attain
To talk with him, and share his confidence.

His loneliness as a young poet breaks out; he may read even Keats and "still", he appeals, "I am alone among the Unseen Voices".

A serious illness, in 1913, led to his "proceeding to France", as he would have described it a year or two later, with the object of escaping the English winter in its more usual manifestations. He became a tutor at Bordeaux, and remained there long enough to acquire a great deal of the French language—the French way of thinking. At Bordeaux he had the good fortune to become acquainted with that old hero, M. Laurent

Tailhade,<sup>1</sup> the poet, well qualified to spur him on in the delicate yet highly original studies of the poetic art which he was making. Owen was never troubled with doubts whether a poet should be a curious designer of verses or not; he frankly enjoyed the art of verse. He intended, in 1913, to publish "Minor Poems—in Minor Keys—By a Minor". Among those, however, I find one of which the power is so full and the tone so deep and final that Mr. Sassoon, happening upon it in a copy without evidence of date, marks it "Late?" But the poems of the same period are for the most part tentative and without a complete impulse, notwithstanding that some of them are on an ambitious scale. There is an ode on "The Swift", another on "Uriconium", and a lengthy tale of the kind that Keats achieved in "Isabella"—but not from Boccaccio. It is "The Little Mermaid of Hans Christian Andersen, done into English verse", and extends to seventy-eight stanzas. One of the obvious things about these immature poems is the sensuousness which Owen had in scarcely less degree than even Keats, and the following lines will show it, alike in its command of the unpleasing and the agreeable.

A tinge

Curdled the sea, like mingling oil and ink. . . .

The witch's den! Around was filthy quag,
In whose soft mire slow-wallowed water-slugs,
Large, fat and white. There sat the fishy hag,
Beneath her hut of bones. . . .

Of golden hair,

This is more like the aureoles of Aurora,
The leaves of flames, the flame of her corona,
Not Petrarch wore such coronals, nor Laura,
Nor yet his orange-trees by old Verona,
Nor gay gold fruits that yellow Barcelona!

<sup>1</sup> M. Tailhade wrote, on April 1, 1915: "Votre lettre est charmante. Cette impuissance de vous 'exprimer en français' qui vous

In the possibilities of splendid colours, in the glories of gems and in music of all kinds his spirit expanded. But as yet the perception of life's values which was to be his was lacking to his poetical passion.

Speculating on his future, he expressed his conclusions in May 1914: "I certainly believe I could make a better musician than many who profess to be, and are accepted as such. Mark, I do not for a moment call myself a musician, nor do I suspect I ever shall be, but there! I love Music, with such strength that I have had to conceal the passion, for fear it be thought weakness. . . . Failing Music, is it Pictures that I hanker to do? I am not abashed to admit it, but heigh ho! If there were anything in me I should, following Legend, have covered, with spirited fresco, the shed, or carved the staircase knob into a serene Apollo! . . . Let me now seriously and shamelessly work out a Poem."

In July 1914 Owen, like most of his contemporaries, was intent upon the brighter side of experience, and that month he wrote the ingenious and fresh verses beginning

Leaves

Murmuring by myriads in the shimmering trees.

Lives

Wakening with wonder in the Pyrenees.

Birds

Cheerily chirping in the early day.

Bards

Singing of summer scything thro' the hay.

That note was soon to be changed, and the "Endymion" phase of Owen's poetical life was at a close. Thenceforward he moved into the sphere of the later "Hyperion", to the lofty sorrow and threnody of which the latest of his writings must be likened; moreover, when he was to be moved by lighter forces of life, they were to be fait hésiter, n'existe que dans votre imagination. Vous peignez avec un délicat pinceau; votre piano a les touches nécessaires pour la grâce et l'émotion."

---

those of a ghost-like secrecy and dimness. In understanding and expressing those mysterious backwaters of a European war's great current, Owen had the advantage of being attuned to the sadness of the French poets; he is, at moments, an English Verlaine. It did not take him long, after the sudden dismissal of peace, to feel and utter the solemn death of a period, and in himself the transition from a youth of maying to an agedness of mood.

Thou hast led me like a heathen sacrifice
With music and with fatal yokes of flowers——

But he did not display any immediate conception that war was disenchantment, obscenity, and torture. He stood, watching the storm working up, and contemplating the change of empires. He had matured, and was now come to his intellectual stature. He viewed the past, and discerned inevitability.

THE SEED

War broke. And now the winter of the world
With perishing great darkness closes in.
The cyclone of the pressure on Berlin
Is over all the width of Europe whirled,
Rending the sails of progress. Rent or furled
Are all art's ensigns. Verse moans. Now begin
Famines of thought and feeling. Love's wine's thin.
The grain of earth's great autumn rots, down-hurled.

For after Spring had bloomed in early Greece,
And Summer blazed to perfect strength in Rome,
There fell a slow grand age, a harvest-home,
Quietly ripening [rich with all increase].<sup>1</sup>

But now the exigent winter, and the need
Of sowings for new spring, and flesh for seed.

Such was his reading of the War as an abstract subject, and in 1915—the date of his enlistment was controlled by his tutorial engagement—he returned to England in order to take his share of its significances to the individual. He joined the Artists' Rifles. His view of the soldier as the victim began to appear in his verses; he had already written a paradoxical "Ballad of Purchase Moneys", opening with the aspect of new crusades and modern knightliness, closing with the burden of war.

<sup>1</sup> These words are deleted, but none substituted, in the manuscript.

The Sun is sweet on rose and wheat
 And on the eyes of children;
 Quiet the street for old men's feet
 And gardens for the children.

The soil is safe, for widow and waif,
 And for the soul of England,
 Because their bodies men vouchsafe
 'To save the soul of England.

Fair days are yet left for the old,
 And children's cheeks are ruddy,
 Because the good lads' limbs lie cold
 And their brave cheeks are bloody.

This was the general position; but Owen, like many others in that multitude of unselfish youth, still had moods in which he regarded his individual life as though no devastating force had arrived to baffle its progress. In a long, self-questioning letter of March 5, 1915, he declared his ambitions as those of a poet: "lesser than Macbeth's and greater, not so happy but much happier". Perhaps, as we all did, he clung to the notion that the War would soon be over. "To be able to write as I know how to, study is necessary: a period of study, then of intercourse with kindred spirits, then of isolation. My heart is ready, but my brain unprepared, and my hand untrained. I quite envisage possibility of non-success."

Gazetted to the Manchester Regiment, Owen joined the 2nd Battalion in January 1917 on the Somme battlefield, where the last sharp fighting was in progress, in that hardest of winters, before the Germans withdrew to their new trench system. Letters home disclose something of his individual experience and of the general life—now so remote in its singularities—of British infantrymen in Flanders. Before leaving the Base Wilfred wrote: "I have just received Orders to take the train at Étapes, to join the 2nd Manchesters. This is a Regular Regiment, so I have come off mighty well. . . . It is a huge satisfaction to be going among well-trained troops and genuine 'real-old' officers. . . . This morning I was hit! We were bombing, and a fragment from somewhere hit my thumb knuckle. I coaxed out one drop of blood. Alas! no more!! There is a fine heroic feeling about being in France, and I am in perfect spirits. A tinge of excitement is about me, but excitement is always necessary to my happiness." On January 4, he wrote a fuller review of the process which took place between a training-camp and a company in the Line: "I have joined the Regiment, who are just at the end of a six weeks' rest. I will not describe the awful vicissitudes of the journey here. I arrived at Folkestone, and put up at the best hotel. It was a place of luxury—inconceivable now—carpets as deep as the mud here—golden flunkeys; pages who must have been melted into their clothes and expanded since; even the porters had clean hands. Even the dogs that licked up the crumbs had clean teeth. Since I set foot on Calais quays I have not had dry feet. No one knew anything about us on this side, and we might have taken weeks to get here, and must have, but for fighting our way here. At the Base, as I said, it was not so bad. We were in the camp of Sir Percy Cunynghame, who had bagged for his Mess the Duke of Connaught's chef. After those two days, we were let down, gently, into the real thing, mud. It has penetrated now into that sanctuary, my sleeping bag, and that holy of holies, my pyjamas. For I sleep on a stone floor, and the servant squashed mud on all my belongings; I suppose by way of baptism.

We are 3 officers in this 'Room', the rest of the house is occupied by servants and the band; the roughest set of knaves I have ever been herded with. Even now their language is shaking the flimsy door between the rooms. I chose a servant for myself yesterday, not for his profile, nor yet for clean hands, but for his excellence in bayonet work. For the servant is always at the side of his officer in the charge, and is therefore worth a dozen nurses. Alas, he of the Bayonet is in the Bombing Section, and it is against Regulations to employ such as a servant. I makeshift with another. Everything is makeshift. The English seem to have fallen into the French unhappy-go-lucky non-system. There are scarcely any houses here. The men lie in barns. Our Mess Room is also an Ante and Orderly Room. We eat and drink out of old tins, some of which show traces of ancient enamel. We are never dry, and never 'off duty'. On all the officers' faces there is a harassed look that I have never seen before, and which in England never will be seen—out of jails. The men are just as Bairnsfather has them—expressionless lumps. We feel the weight of them hanging on us. I have found not a few of the old Fleetwood Musketry party here. They seemed glad to see me, as far as the set doggedness of their features would admit. I censored hundreds of letters yesterday, and the hope of peace was in every one. The Daily Mail map, which appeared about Jan. 2, will be of extreme interest to you. We were stranded in a certain town one night, and I saved the party of us by collaring an Orderly in the streets and making him take us to a Sergeants' Mess. . . . I am perfectly well and strong, but unthinkably dirty and squalid. I scarcely dare to wash. Pass on as much of this happy news as may interest people. The favourite song of the men is,

The Roses round the door
Makes me love mother more.

They sing this everlastingly. I don't disagree."

Sunday, Jan. 7, 1917. "It is afternoon. We had an Inspection to make from 9 to 12 this morning. I have wandered into a village café where they gave me writing paper. We made a redoubtable march yesterday from the last Camp to this. The awful state of the roads, and the enormous weight carried, was too much for scores of men. Officers also carried full packs, but I had a horse part of the way. It was beginning to freeze through the rain when we arrived at our tents. We were at the mercy of the cold, and, being in health, I never suffered so terribly as yesterday afternoon. I am really quite well, but have sensations kindred to being seriously ill. As I was making my damp bed, I heard the guns for the first time. It was a sound not without a certain sublimity. They woke me again at 4 o'clock. We are two in a tent. I am with the Lewis Gun Officer. We begged stretchers from the doctor to sleep on. Our servant brings our food to us in our tents. This would not be so bad, but for lack of water and the intense damp cold. . . . This morning I have been reading Trench Standing Orders to my platoon (verb. sap.). Needless to say I show a cheerier face to them than I wear in writing this letter; but I must not disguise from you the fact that we are at one of the worst parts of the Line. . . . I can't tell you any more Facts. I have no Fancies and no Feelings. Positively they went numb with my feet. Love is not quenched, except the unenduring flickerings thereof." Two days later he reports: "We moved further up yesterday, most of the way on 'buses. I have just had your long-looked-for letter. It seems wrong that ever your dear handwriting should come into such a Gehenna as this. There is a terrific strafe on. The artillery are doing a 48 hours' bombardment. At night it is like a stupendous thunderstorm, for the flashes are quite as bright as lightning. When we arrived at this deserted village last night, there had been no billets prepared for the battalion—owing to misunderstanding. Imagine the confusion!

For my part I discovered, or rather my new-chosen and faithful servant discovered, a fine little hut, with a chair in it. A four-legged chair! The roof is waterproof, and there is a stove. There is only one slight disadvantage: there is a howitzer just 70 or 80 yards away, firing over the top every minute or so. I can't tell you how glad I am you got me the ear-defenders. I have to wear them at night. Every time No. 2 (the nearest gun) fires, all my pharmacopœia, all my boots, candle, and nerves take a smart jump upwards. This phenomenon is immediately followed by a fine rain of particles from the roof. I keep blowing them off the page. From time to time the village is shelled, but just now nothing is coming over. Anyhow there is a good cellar close to. . . . I spent an hour to-day behind the guns (to get used to them). The major commanding the battery was very pleasant indeed. He took me to his H.Q., and gave me a book of poems to read as if it were the natural thing to do!! But all night I shall be hearing the fellow's voice:

'Number Two—FIRE!'

That same afternoon, his next letter mentions, he "took a tour into the Line which we shall occupy. Our little party was shelled going up across the open country. It was not at all frightful, and only one 4.7 got anywhere near, falling plump in the road, but quite a minute after we had passed the spot. I tell you these things because afterwards they will sound less exciting. . . . My Company Commander (A Company) has been out here since the beginning: 'tis a gentleman and an original (!) Next in command is Haydon, whom I greatly like. . . . Even as they prophesied in the Artists, I have to take a close interest in feet, and this very day I knelt down with a candle and watched each man perform his anointment with whale oil; praising the clean feet, but not reviling the unclean. . . . I am not allowed to send a sketch, but you must know I am transformed now, wearing a steel helmet, buff-jerkin of leather, rubber-waders up to the hips, and gauntlets. But for the rifle, we are exactly like Cromwellian Troopers. The waders are indispensable. In  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles of trench which I waded yesterday there was not one inch of dry ground. There is a mean depth of 2 feet of water. . . . These things I need: (1) small pair nail scissors; (2) celluloid hair-pin box from Boots' with tight-fitting lid, and containing boracic powder; (3) Player's 'Navy Cut'; (4) ink pellets; (5) Sweets (!!). We shall not be in touch with supplies by day."

This heralded his first trench tour, on the St. Quentin front. On January 16 he wrote: "I can see no excuse for deceiving you about these last 4 days. I have suffered seventh hell. I have not been at the front. I have been in front of it. I held an advanced post, that is, a 'dug-out' in the middle of No Man's Land. We had a march of 3 miles over shelled road, then nearly 3 along a flooded trench. After that we came to where the trenches had been blown flat out and had to go over the top. It was of course dark, too dark, and the ground was not mud, not sloppy mud, but an octopus of sucking clay, 3, 4, and 5 feet deep, relieved only by craters full of water. Men have been known to drown in them. Many stuck in the mud and only got on by leaving their waders, equipment, and in some cases their clothes. High explosives were dropping all around, and machine-guns spluttered every few minutes. But it was so dark that even the German flares did not reveal us. Three-quarters dead, I mean each of us  $\frac{3}{4}$  dead, we reached the dug-out and relieved the wretches therein. I then had to go forth and find another dug-out for a still more advanced post where I left 18 bombers. I was responsible for other posts on the left, but there was a junior officer in charge. My dug-out held 25 men tight packed. Water filled it to a depth of 1 or 2 feet, leaving say 4 feet of air. One entrance had been blown in and blocked. So far, the other remained. The Germans knew we were staying there and decided we shouldn't.

Those fifty hours were the agony of my happy life. Every ten minutes on Sunday afternoon seemed an hour. I nearly broke down and let myself drown in the water that was now slowly rising over my knees. Towards 6 o'clock, when, I suppose, you would be going to church, the shelling grew less intense and less accurate; so that I was mercifully helped to do my duty and crawl, wade, climb, and flounder over No Man's Land to visit my other post. It took me half an hour to move about 150 yards. I was chiefly annoyed by our own machine-guns from behind. The seeng-sceng-sceng of the bullets reminded me of Mary's canary. On the whole I can support the canary better. In the platoon on my left the sentries over the dug-out were blown to nothing. One of these poor fellows was my first servant whom I rejected. If I had kept him he would have lived, for servants don't do sentry duty. I kept my own sentries half-way down the stairs during the more terrific bombardment. In spite of this one lad was blown down and, I am afraid, blinded. This was my only casualty. The officer of the left platoon has come out completely prostrated and is in hospital. I am now as well, I suppose, as ever. I allow myself to tell you all these things because I am never going back to this awful post. It is the worst the Manchesters have ever held; and we are going back for a rest. I hear that the officer who relieved me left his 3 Lewis guns behind when he came out. (He had only 24 hours in.) He will be court-martialled."

Rest, with the infantry on the Western Front, became a term of irony. January 19, 1917: "We are now a long way back, in a ruined village, all huddled together in a farm. We all sleep in the same room where we eat and try to live. My bed is a hammock of rabbit-wire stuck up beside a great shell-hole in the wall. Snow is deep about, and melts through the gaping roof, on to my blanket. We are wretched beyond my previous imagination—but safe. Last night indeed I had to 'go up' with a party. We got lost in the snow. I went on ahead to scout—foolishly alone—and, when half a mile away from the party, got overtaken by

GAS.

It was only tear-gas from a shell, and I got safely back (to the party) in my helmet, with nothing worse than a severe fright! And a few tears, some natural, some unnatural. . . . Coal, water, candles, accommodation, everything is scarce. We have not always air! When I took my helmet off last night—O Air, it was a heavenly thing! . . . They want to call No Man's Land 'England' because we keep supremacy there. It is like the eternal place of gnashing of teeth; the Slough of Despond could be contained in one of its crater-holes; the fires of Sodom and Gomorrah could not light a candle to it—to find the way to Babylon the Fallen. It is pock-marked like a body of foulest disease, and its odour is the breath of cancer. I have not seen any dead. I have done worse. In the dank air I have perceived it, and in the darkness, felt. Those 'Somme Pictures' are the laughing-stock of the army—like the trenches on exhibition in Kensington. No Man's Land under snow is like the face of the moon, chaotic, crater-ridden, uninhabitable, awful, the abode of madness. To call it 'England'! I would as soon call my House (!) Krupp Villa, or my child Chlorina-Phosgena. . . . The people of England needn't hope. They must agitate. But they are not yet agitated even. Let them imagine 50 strong men trembling as with ague for 50 hours!"

The winter of 1916-1917 will long be remembered for its scarcely tolerable cold. The 2nd Manchesters did not get the rest expected, and Owen was soon in the front line again. "In this place my platoon had no dug-outs, but had to lie in the snow under the deadly wind. By day it was impossible to stand up, or even crawl about, because we were behind only a little ridge screening us from the Boche's periscope. We had 5 Tommy's

Cookers between the platoon, but they did not suffice to melt the ice in the water-cans. So we suffered cruelly from thirst. The marvel is that we did not all die of cold. As a matter of fact, only one of my party actually froze to death before he could be got back, but I am not able to tell how many have ended in hospital. I had no real casualties from shelling, though for 10 minutes every hour whizzbangs fell a few yards short of us. Showers of soil rained on us but no fragment of shell could find us. . . . My feet ached until they could ache no more, and so they temporarily died. I was kept warm by the ardour of Life within me. I forgot hunger in the hunger for Life. . . . I cannot say I felt any fear. We were all half-crazed by the buffeting of the high explosives. I think the most unpleasant reflection that weighed on me was the impossibility of getting back any wounded, a total impossibility by day, and frightfully difficult by night. We were marooned on a frozen desert. There is not a sign of life on the horizon, and a thousand signs of death. Not a blade of grass, not an insect; once or twice a day the shadow of a big hawk, scenting carrion. By degrees, day by day, we worked back through the reserve and support lines to the crazy village where the Battalion takes breath. While in support we inhabited vast Boche dug-outs (full of all kinds of souvenirs). They are so deep that they seem warm like mines! There we began to thaw. . . . Then I had the heavenly-dictated order to proceed on a Transport Course. Me in Transports? Aren't you?" He was writing from the riding school at Amiens, on February 4, with the prospect of a month's exercise (he was a natural horseman) and lodgings "in a HOUSE". "Quite 10 years ago I made a study of this town and cathedral, in the Treasury. It is all familiar now!" He looked at the "inoffensive sky" and his room, and reflected, "I suppose I can endure cold and fatigue and the face-to-face death as well as another; but extra for me there is the universal pervasion of Ugliness. Hideous landscapes, vile noises, foul language, and nothing but foul, even from one's own mouth (for all are devil-ridden)—everything unnatural, broken, blasted; the distortion of the dead, whose unburiable bodies sit outside the dug-outs all day, all night, the most execrable sights on earth. In poetry we call them the most glorious. But to sit with them all day, all night—and a week later to come back and find them still sitting there in motionless groups, THAT is what saps the 'soldierly spirit'."

On March 1 he rejoined his battalion in the extreme south of the British trench line, recently taken over from the French. It was quiet—"so quiet that we have our meals in a shallow dug-out, and only go down deep to sleep". He was soon kept busy in charge of digging parties. On March 14 he reported an accident<sup>1</sup> of a kind which might easily have been more frequent in the devastated area: "Last night I was going round through pitch darkness to see a man in a dangerous state of exhaustion. I fell into a kind of well, only about 15 ft., but I caught the back of my head on the way down. The doctors (not in consultation!) say I have a slight concussion. Of course I have a vile headache, but I don't feel at all fuddled." Five days later he wrote again of this mishap. "I am in a hospital bed (for the first time in life). After falling into that hole (which I believe was a shell-hole in a floor, laying open a deep cellar) I felt nothing more than a headache, for 3 days; and went up to the front in the usual way—or nearly the usual way, for I felt too weak to wrestle with the mud, and sneaked along the top, snapping my fingers at a clumsy sniper. When I got back I developed a high fever, vomited strenuously and long, and was seized with muscular pains. The night before last I was sent to a shanty a bit farther back, and yesterday motored on to this Field Hospital, called Casualty Clearing Station 13." He added that he felt better, and, on March 21, that he was getting up and expecting soon "to overtake my Battalion" again. However, it was in hospital that he drafted (March 23) the sonnet "With an Identity Disc".

<sup>1</sup> It happened at Le Quesnoy-en-Santerre.

The battalion had been attacking, and he "caravanned" to them over unfamiliar territory. On the way he had one night's lodging "with a family of refugees, 3 boys, 2 tiny girls: a good class socially, and of great charm personally. I was treated as a god, and indeed begin to suspect I have a heart as comprehensive as Victor Hugo's, Shakspeare's, or your own." (He is writing to his mother.) "In 24 hours I never took so many hugs and kisses in my life, no, not in the first chapter even. They took reliefs at it. It would have astounded the English mind." He found his battalion, and was very welcome, for they had not made their successful attack without heavy losses. Then—"We stuck to our line 4 days (and 4 nights) without relief, in the open, and in the snow. Not an hour passed without a shell amongst us. I never went off to sleep on those days, because the others were far more fagged after several days of fighting than I fresh from bed. We lay in wet snow. I kept alive on brandy, the fear of death, and the glorious prospect of the cathedral town just below us, glittering with the morning. With glasses I could easily make out the general architecture of the cathedral: so I have told you how near we have got. The French are on the skirts of the town, as I could see. It was unknown where exactly the Boche was lying in front of us. The job of finding out fell upon me. I started out at midnight with 2 corporals and 6 picked men, warning other regiments on our flanks not to make any mistake about us. It was not very long before the Hun sent up his Very lights, but the ground was favourable to us, and I and my corporal prowled on until we clearly heard voices, and the noises of carrying and digging. When I had seen them quite clearly moving about, and marked the line of their entrenchment, it might seem my job was done; but my orders were to discover the force of the enemy. So then I took an inch or two of cover and made a noise like a platoon. Instantly we had at least two machine-guns turned on us, and a few odd rifles. Then we made a scramble for 'home'. Another night I was putting out an advanced post when we were seen or heard and greeted with shrapnel. The man crouching shoulder to shoulder to me gets a beautiful round hole pierced deep in his biceps. I am nothing so fortunate, being only buffeted in the eyes by the shock and whacked on the calf by a spent fragment, which scarcely tore the puttee."

Almost three weeks passed before his next letter (April 25). He had been in attack in the period. "Never before has the Battalion encountered such intense shelling as rained upon us as we advanced in the open. . . . The reward we got for all this was to remain in the Line 12 days. For twelve days I did not wash my face, nor take off my boots, nor sleep a deep sleep. For twelve days we lay in holes, where at any moment a shell might put us out. I think the worst incident was one wet night when we lay up against a railway embankment. A big shell lit on the top of the bank, just 2 yards from my head. Before I awoke, I was blown in the air right away from the bank! I passed most of the following days in a railway cutting, in a hole just big enough to lie in, and covered with corrugated iron. My brother officer of B Coy., 2nd Lt. G., lay opposite in a similar hole. But he was covered with earth, and no relief will ever relieve him, nor will his Rest be a 9-days-Rest." From this railway cutting it was Owen's duty "about midnight to flounder across to the French and knock at the door of the Company H.Q. and ask if all was well, to be answered by a grunt".

"I think that the terribly long time we stayed unrelieved was unavoidable; yet it makes us feel bitterly towards those in England who might relieve us, and will not. We are now doing what is called a Rest, but we rise at 6.15 and work without break until about 10 P.M., for there is always a Pow-Wow for officers after dinner. And if I have not written yesterday, it is because I must have kept hundreds of letters uncensored, and inquiries about missing men unanswered." Part of this letter is written on a military document. "I hope", says Owen, "this bit of paper is not incriminating to send over." The document, which recalls the Western Front in a decidedly unpopular aspect, reads:

AMENDMENT

S.S. 143—"INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE TRAINING OF PLATOONS FOR OFFENSIVE ACTION, 1917."

Appendix I.—NOTES—LINE 6. *After "No. 1" add
"and No. 2".*

On May 2 he wrote from the 13th Casualty Clearing Station: "Here again! The Doctor suddenly was moved to forbid me to go into action next time the Battalion go, which will be in a day or two. I did not go sick or anything, but he is nervous about my nerves, and sent me down yesterday—labelled Neurasthenia. I still of course suffer from the headaches traceable to my concussion. . . . Do not for a moment suppose I have had a 'breakdown'! I am simply avoiding one." Joking over his having escaped actual wounds, he remembers, "I should certainly have got a bullet wound, if I had not used the utmost caution in wriggling along the ground on one occasion. There was a party of Germans in a wood about 200 yards behind us, and his trench, which we had just taken, was only a foot deep in places, and I was obliged to keep passing up and down it. As a matter of fact I rather enjoyed the evening after the stunt, being only a few hundred yards from the town, as you knew, and having come through the fire so miraculously, and being, moreover, well fed on the Boche's untouched repast!! It was curious and troubling to pick up his letters where he had left off writing in the middle of a word!"

Owen also sent an account of this attack to a brother who might have illusions of the romance of war (May 14). 'The sensations of going over the top are about as exhilarating as those dreams of falling over a precipice, when you see the rocks at the bottom surging up to you. I woke up without being squashed. Some didn't. There was an extraordinary exultation in the act of slowly walking forward, showing ourselves openly. There was no bugle and no drum, for which I was very sorry. I kept up a kind of chanting sing-song:

Keep the Line straight!
Not so fast on the left!
Steady on the left!
Not so fast!

Then we were caught in a tornado of shells. The various 'waves' were all broken up, and we carried on like a crowd moving off a cricket-field. When I looked back and saw the ground all crawling and wormy with wounded bodies, I felt no horror at all, but only an immense exultation at having got through the barrage. We were more than an hour moving over the open, and by the time we came to the German trench every Boche had fled. But a party of them had remained, lying low in a wood close behind us, and they gave us a very bad time for the next four hours. When we were marching along a sunken road, we got the wind up once. We knew we must have passed the German outposts somewhere on our left rear. All at once the cry rang down, 'Line the bank'. There was a tremendous scurry of fixing bayonets, tugging of breech-covers, and opening pouches, but when we peeped over, behold a solitary German, haring along towards us, with his head down and his arms stretched in front of him, as if he were going to take a high dive through the earth (which I have no doubt he would like to have done). Nobody offered to shoot him, he looked too funny; and that was our only prisoner that day!"

Passing a sunny idleness in scenery which reminded him of the Faerie Queene and of Arthur in Avalon, he nevertheless found himself with a high temperature, and believed he had trench fever. He remained in the Casualty Clearing Station until June 6, when he wrote: "I go down to-day. Where to? Nobody knows. Maybe in the Hospital Train for days."

About June 10, after confused arrangements, Owen was at No. 1 General Hospital. "I think it is very likely that the Americans will send me to England." And a week later he was at the Welsh Hospital, Netley, "in too receptive a mood to speak at all about the other side, the seamy side of the 'Manche'. I just wander about absorbing Hampshire."

One of Owen's letters from the hospital on the Somme may be conveniently quoted at this point. It sums up the creed which had taken bold form in his mind, and awaited poetical completion: "Already I have comprehended a light which never will filter into the dogma of any national church: namely, that one of Christ's essential commands was: Passivity at any price! Suffer dishonour and disgrace, but never resort to arms. Be bullied, be outraged, be killed; but do not kill. It may be a chimerical and an ignominious principle, but there it is. It can only be ignored; and I think pulpit professionals are ignoring it very skilfully and successfully indeed. . . . And am I not myself a conscientious objector with a very seared conscience? . . . Christ is literally in 'no man's land'. There men often hear His voice: Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for a friend. Is it spoken in English only and French? I do not believe so. Thus you see how pure Christianity will not fit in with pure patriotism."

From Netley, he was sent to what he described on June 26 as "a decayed hydro"—the Craiglockhart War Hospital, a short way out of Edinburgh. "At present", he wrote on August 8, clearly feeling the War's influence even more deeply than before, "I am a sick man in hospital, by night; a poet, for quarter of an hour after breakfast; I am whatever and whoever I see while going down to Edinburgh on the train: greengrocer, policeman, shopping lady, errand-boy, paper-boy, blind man, crippled Tommy, bank-clerk, carter, all of these in half an hour; next a German student in earnest; then I either peer over bookstalls, in back-streets, or do a bit of a dash down Princes Street—according as I have taken weak tea or strong coffee for breakfast. . . . Yes, you will like to read Mrs. Browning. Having listened so long to her low, sighing voice (which can be heard often through the page), and having seen her hair, not in a museum case, but palpably in visions, and having received kindness from a boy to whom she was kind (M. Léger—he is still a boy); for these reasons, I say, the Flapper flaps in vain. The other day I read a biography of Tennyson, which says he was unhappy, even in the midst of his fame, wealth, and domestic serenity. Divine discontent! I can quite believe he never knew happiness for one moment such as I have—for one or two moments. But as for misery, was he ever frozen alive, with dead men for comforters? Did he hear the moaning at the Bar, not at twilight and the evening bell only, but at dawn, noon, and night, eating and sleeping, walking and working, always the close moaning of the Bar; the thunder, the hissing, and the whining of the Bar?—Tennyson, it seems, was always a great child. So should I have been, but for Beaumont Hamel. (Not before January 1917 did I write the only lines of mine that carry the stamp of maturity—these:

But the old happiness is unreturning,
Boys have no grief as grievous as youth's yearning;
Boys have no sadness sadder than our hope.)

. . . It is worthy of mention that we have been in mist for 3 days: a gloriously luminous mist at times. I saw Holyrood on Sunday afternoon (being alone on Salisbury Crags), a floating mirage in gold mist; a sight familiar enough in dreams and poems, but which I never thought possible in these islands. It was the picture of a picture. . . .”

At Craiglockhart he was enterprising; he performed at concerts, he lectured, and he edited the hospital magazine called The Hydra. About the beginning of August, Captain Siegfried Sassoon arrived. Owen had been reading his Old Huntsman. “Nothing like his trench-life sketches has ever been written or ever will be written.” One day he ventured to call at his hero’s room and to show him some poems, which received some praise and some blame. On the evening of September 7, again, “Sassoon called me in to him; and having condemned some of my poems, amended others, and rejoiced over a few, he read me his very last works, which are superb beyond anything in his book. . . . I don’t tell him so, or that I am not worthy to light his pipe. I simply sit tight and tell him where I think he goes wrong.” There is a letter of September 22 almost dithyrambic in honour of Mr. Sassoon “as a man, as a friend, and as a poet”, and in another Owen refers modestly to “my recent efforts in Sassoon’s manner”. The Hydra was a fortunate periodical; it received new poems by the two best English war-poets. The chance that gave Owen the friendship of Mr. Sassoon, then endeavouring in all ways open to him, but above all by poetical challenge, to shed light on the futile ugliness of the War, was a good one. It supplied the answer to the petition for a poet’s companionship which, as has been seen, Owen uttered in his verses years before. To ascribe to it altogether the subsequent self-revelation of Owen as a poet would be incorrect, but the impact of Mr. Sassoon’s character, thought, and independent poetic method gave the other a new purpose. Owen might have agreed with the author of Hudibras—

An English poet should be tried by his peers,
And not by pedants and philosophers,

—on this occasion. The trial brought out his greatness and directed his passion. With a clear and spacious view of the function of poetry, he rapidly produced the poems which have made him famous.

The problem of dating most of Owen's papers is such that one cannot be sure when he thought out the use of assonances, instead of rhymes, which he perfected. He was, as I have said, an unwearied worker in the laboratory of word, rhythm, and music of language, partly by nature and partly from his close acquaintance with French poetry and its exacting technical subtleties. For those who have the inquiring mind in such subjects, I transcribe here part of what may be one of his earlier attempts to derive unfamiliar chords from our metrical speech.

Has your soul sipped
Of the sweetness of all sweets?
Has it well supped
But yet hungers and sweats?

I have been witness
Of a strange sweetness,
All fancy surpassing,
Past all supposing.

Passing the rays
Of the rubies of morning,
Or the soft rise
Of the moon; or the meaning
Known to the rose
Of her mystery and mourning.

Sweeter than nocturnes
Of the wild nightingale
Or than love's nectar
After life's gall.

At all events, having discovered and practised this par-rhyme, Owen became aware that it would serve him infinitely in the voicing of emotion and imagination.

What he made of it is felt at its fullest, perhaps, in the solemn music of "Strange Meeting", but again and again by means of it he creates remoteness, darkness, emptiness, shock, echo, the last word. So complete and characteristic is his deployment of this technical resource that imitators have been few; but, indeed, there is another cause why they have been so. Only an innate, unconventional command over language, and a rich and living vocabulary—in short, only a genius for poetry could for long work in that uncommon medium.

The doctor who had charge of Owen at Craiglockhart, A. Brock, took more than common interest in him, regarding him as "a very outstanding figure, both in intellect and in character". In order to restore his nerves to serenity, Dr. Brock directed his energies to any peaceful pursuit that could be arranged; he proposed to him the writing of a poem on a classical subject, "Antaeus", put him in touch with the Edinburgh "submerged tenth", and caused him to give lectures at Tynecastle School. At one time Owen was busy with historical research in the Advocates' Library, at the request of Lord Guthrie, whose great courtesy fascinated him. When, towards the end of October, the question of Owen's transference from Craiglockhart arose imminently, he was unhappy: "I am seriously beginning to have aching sensations at being rooted up from this pleasant Region".

I am indebted to Mrs. Mary Gray, who knew Owen well at this period, for an account of his personality. "The bond which drew us together was an intense pity for suffering humanity—a need to alleviate it, wherever possible, and an inability to shirk the sharing of it, even when this seemed useless. This was the keynote of Wilfred's character; indeed it was, simply, Wilfred. His sensitiveness, his sympathy were so acute, so profound, that direct personal experience and individual development can hardly be said to have existed for him. He could only suffer, or rejoice, vicariously. . . . The objection that he overlooked individual emotion could only be urged by small natures, selfishly engrossed in their woes. To anyone else, it was immediately evident that their troubles and their happiness were his. . . . He was naturally silent, but with a silence more expressive than words. He had a wonderful tenderness. Silent and reserved as he was, he was adored by my little girl of eight months old. He was never, at that time, gay or playful, but he had that tenderness and a wonderful smile—a sort of gentle radiance, and the tacit understanding between him and the child was almost uncanny. It was the same with a large family of very poor children, and their parents. I was interested in an Italian one-eyed street singer with a most tragic history and fine personality. His courage, cheerfulness, and philosophy drew Wilfred to him at once. We went often to their very poor, exquisitely kept home in the slums, where again, despite his silence, gentle gravity, and reserve, Wilfred was adored—there is no other word for it. He suffered deeply from diffidence, and self-distrust. This was entirely unconnected with any consideration of the impression he made on others. He set himself immensely high standards, and in moments of despondency grieved deeply over what he regarded, quite unjustifiably, as his failure to live up to them. Nevertheless, in his most despondent moods he could never be said to have experienced despair. His courage was too indomitable for that, and he never laid down his arms. . . . Throughout this trial he kept alight the spark of divine fire—the steadfast belief that through suffering do we attain to the only true spiritual beauty.”

After Craiglockhart, Owen went to Scarborough, and at first, by way of light duty, was appointed majordomo of the hotel where the seventy officers of the 5th (Reserve) Battalion, Manchester Regiment, assembled.

The following excerpts from a letter written by him in November 1917, while they disclose the honour in which he held the recipient, Mr. Sassoon, also give a better impression of Owen's spirit at the time than would be otherwise recoverable. "Know that since mid-September, when you still regarded me as a tiresome little knocker on your door, I held you as Keats + Christ + Elijah + my Colonel + my father-confessor + Amenophis IV. in profile. What's that mathematically? . . . If you consider what the above names have severally done for me, you will know what you are doing. And you have fixed my Life—however short. You did not light me: I was always a mad comet; but you have fixed me. I spun round you a satellite for a month, but I shall swing out soon, a dark star in the orbit where you will blaze. It is some consolation to know that Jupiter himself sometimes swims out of ken.

"To come back to our sheep, as the French never say, I have had a perfect little note from Robert Ross, and have arranged a meeting at 12.30 on Nov. 9th. He mentioned staying at Half-Moon St., but the house is full.

"I have ordered several copies of Fairies and Fusiliers, but shall not buy all, in order to leave the book exposed on the Shrewsbury counters! I'm also getting Colvin's new Life of Keats—no price advertised, but, damn it, I'm to enjoy my leave! . . .

"What I most miss in Edinburgh (not Craiglockhart) is the conviviality of the Four Boys (L. vivere—to live). Some day I must tell how we sang, shouted, whistled, and danced through the dark lanes through Colinton; and how we laughed till the meteors showered round us, and we fell calm under the winter stars. And some of us saw the pathway of the spirits for the first time. And seeing it so far above us, and feeling the good road so safe beneath us, we praised God with louder whistling; and knew we loved one another as no men love for long.

"Which, if the bridge-players, Craig and Lockhart, could have seen, they would have called down the wrath of Jahveh, and buried us under the fires of the City you wot of."

Following an ancient custom of mankind, he reviewed the past on the last day of 1917, writing thus to his mother: "And so I have come to the true measure of man. I am not dissatisfied [with] my years. Everything has been done in bouts: Bouts of awful labour at Shrewsbury and Bordeaux; bouts of amazing pleasure in the Pyrenees, and play at Craiglockhart; bouts of religion at Dunsden; bouts of horrible danger on the Somme; bouts of poetry always; of your affection always; of sympathy for the oppressed always. I go out of this year a poet, my dear mother, as which I did not enter it. I am held peer by the Georgians; I am a poet's poet. I am started. The tugs have left me; I feel the great swelling of the open sea taking my galleon. Last year, at this time (it is just midnight, and now is the intolerable instant of the Change), last year I lay awake in a windy tent in the middle of a vast, dreadful encampment. It seemed neither France nor England, but a kind of paddock where the beasts are kept a few days before the shambles. I heard the revelling of the Scotch troops, who are now dead, and who knew they would be dead. I thought of this present night, and whether I should indeed—whether we should indeed—whether you would indeed—but I thought neither long nor deeply, for I am a master of elision. But chiefly I thought of the very strange look on all faces in that camp; an incomprehensible look, which a man will never see in England, though wars should be in England; nor can it be seen in any battle. But only in Étapes. It was not despair, or terror, it was more terrible than terror, for it was a blindfold look, and without expression, like a dead rabbit's. It will never be painted, and no actor will ever seize it. And to describe it, I think I must go back and be with them. We are sending seven officers straight out to-morrow. I have not said what I am thinking this night, but next December I will surely do so."

The life that was customarily endured in home camps during 1918 had little (other than mere security) to recommend it, particularly to those who remembered the prevailing good-nature and resourceful activity of the armies in Flanders. Owen wrote to his mother in May 1918, of old associations and of his poetry. "I've been busy this evening with my terrific poem (at present) called 'The Deranged'. This poem the Editor of the Burlington Magazine—(a 2/6 Arts Journal which takes no poetry)—old More Adey, I say, solemnly prohibited me from sending to the English Review, on the grounds that 'the English Review should not be encouraged'!!! Five years ago this would, as you suggest, have turned my head—but nowadays my head turns only in shame away from these first flickers of the limelight. For I am old already for a poet, and so little is yet achieved.

"And I want no limelight, and celebrity is the last infirmity I desire.

"Fame is the recognition of one's peers. I have already more than their recognition. . . . Behold, are they not already as many Keatses? As I looked out into the untravelled world over the hedges of Dunsden Garden, I saw them in the dawn and made ready to go out and meet them.

"And they were glad and rejoiced, though I am the gravest and least witty of that grave, witty company."

Among those who had become aware that a new soldier-poet called Owen was arriving, I find the names of Robert Ross, Roderick Meiklejohn, H. W. Massingham, H. G. Wells, Arnold Bennett, and Osbert Sitwell; and Owen was delighted to find himself at last within the circle of men of letters. There was a project of publishing his poems, and William Heinemann, despite "the state of the paper supply", expressed a willingness to undertake it, or at least to consider it. Another author whose acquaintance he made was Charles Scott-Moncrieff, who obtained Owen's criticism and advice for his translation of the "Song of Roland". That work was originally dedicated "To Mr. W. O.", with a tribute to his mastery of the art of poetry; when it was published in 1919, it contained instead a group of poems in memory of three friends, one of which is a sonnet to Owen:

In the centuries of time to come
Men shall be happy and rehearse thy fame.

Scott-Moncrieff, then at the War Office, endeavoured to find some post for Owen which would mean that he would be kept in England. On May 21, Owen had some prospect "of becoming Instructing Staff Officer to a Cadet Battalion. I would rather," he wrote, "work in the War Office itself, and that seems not impossible either. Really I would like most to go to Egypt or Italy, but that is not entertained by Scott-Moncrieff." In the end, none of these plans or wishes materialized.

At the close of July he was preparing to go overseas. "Now must I throw my little candle on [Sassoon's] torch and go out again. There are rumours of a large draft of officers shortly." A few days later he reported that he was to attend for medical inspection, and would proceed to France. "I am glad. That is I am much gladder to be going out again than afraid. I shall be better able to cry my outcry, playing my part. The secondary annoyances and discomforts of France behind the line can be no worse than this Battalion. On Friday we were called up at 3 A.M. and had the usual day's work. The Adjutant is ill, and Stiebel is ill. I did Stiebel's job on the stunt, and am still doing it. There are only mock alarms of course. But this morning at 8.20 we heard a boat torpedoed in the bay, about a mile out, they say who saw it. I think only 10 lives were saved. I wish the Boche would have the pluck to come right in and make a clean sweep of the pleasure boats, and the promenaders on the Spa, and all the stinking Leeds and Bradford war-profiteers now reading John Bull on Scarborough Sands."

Other letters carry Owen's story towards its untimely close. There was a last day with his mother. Looking with her across the Channel, he repeated a favourite passage from Rabindranath Tagore: "When I go from hence, let this be my parting word, that what I have seen is unsurpassable". On August 31, 1918, he reported his embarkation to Mr. Sassoon: "I have been incoherent ever since I tried to say good-bye on the steps of Lancaster Gate. But everything is clear now; and I'm in hasty retreat towards the Front. Battle is easier here; and therefore you will stay and endure old men and women to the End, and wage the bitterer war and more hopeless." Another message followed quickly: "The sun is warm, the sky is clear, the waves are dancing fast and bright. But these are not Lines written in Dejection. Serenity Shelley never dreamed of crowns me. Will it last when I shall have gone into Caverns and Abysmals such as he never reserved for his worst daemons? . . . And now I am among the herds again, a Herdsman; and a Shepherd of sheep that do not know my voice." Such was, indeed, the feeling of a young officer with temporary hundreds of men suddenly entrusted to him for marching somewhere or other at the base. But Owen was quickly with his old battalion, and he obtained the command of D Company. His new experiences, as he had anticipated, were terrible, but he maintained the serenity of which he spoke, and he continued to write poems on the war. He wrote to Mr. Sassoon on September 22: "You said it would be a good thing for my poetry if I went back. That is my consolation for feeling a fool. This is what shells scream at me every time: 'Haven't you got the wits to keep out of this?'" And on October 10: "Your letter reached me at the exact moment it was most needed—when we had come far enough out of the line to feel the misery of billets; and I had been seized with writer's cramp after making out my casualty reports. (I'm O.C. D Coy.) The Battalion had a sheer time last week. I can find no better epithet; because I cannot say I suffered anything, having let my brain grow dull. That is to say, my nerves are in perfect order.

"It is a strange truth: that your Counter-Attack frightened me much more than the real one: though the boy by my side, shot through the head, lay on top of me, soaking my shoulder, for half an hour.

"Catalogue? Photograph? Can you photograph the crimson-hot iron as it cools from the smelting? That is what Jones's blood looked like, and felt like. My senses are charred.

"I shall feel again as soon as I dare, but now I must not. I don't take the cigarette out of my mouth when I write Deceased over their letters.

"But one day I will write Deceased over many books.

"I am glad I've been recommended for M.C., and hope I get it, for the confidence it may give me at home. Full of confidence after having taken a few machine-guns<sup>1</sup> (with the help of one seraphic lance-corporal), I held a most glorious brief peace talk in a pill-box. You would have been en pâmoisons." His Military Cross was duly awarded.

I quote further from the letter of October 10, 1918: "Yes, there is something you can send me: 2 copies of Counter-Attack, one inscribed. One is for the Adjutant—who begged a book of Erskine MacD.'s Soldier-Poets which I had with me—because I met one of these amalgamations at the Base. And liked him for his immediate subjugation to my principles and your mastery. . . . At the Base I met O'Riordan (of the Irish Theatre, and collaborator with Conrad). A troll of a man; not unlike Robbie (Ross) for unexpected shocks. It was easy, and, as I reflect, inevitable, to tell him everything about oneself. . . . While you are apparently given over to wrens, I have found brave companionship in a poppy, behind whose stalk I took cover from five machine-guns and several howitzers. I desire no more exposed flanks of any sort for a long time.

<sup>1</sup> "I only shot one man with my revolver (at about thirty yards!); the others I took with a smile."

"Of many who promised to send me literary magazines no one has succeeded, except the Editor of To-day. . . ."

A fellow-officer, Lieut. J. Foulkes, M.C., has obligingly written down his reminiscences of the Owen who belonged to the trenches and billets of Flanders. "We travelled together (in company with Major Murphy, D.S.O., who was to become 2nd in Command, and, in early November, commanded the 2nd Manchesters) from the base, Étapes, to meet the Battalion at Corbie on the R. Ancre. . . . The first real attack in which we took part was the one which followed the capture of the Hindenburg Line. We had to take what I think was then looked upon as a 2nd Hindenburg Line and which I remember was well wired. The attack was successful but costly—Owen and I were the only officers left in our Company and he became pro tem. Company Commander. It was for his work here that he received the M.C. Left with few men and lacking any means of cover save a German pill-box, which was really a death-trap because it was on this that the enemy concentrated his fire, Owen succeeded in holding the line until relieved by the Lancs. Fusiliers some time afterwards. This is where I admired his work—in leading his remnants, in the middle of the night, back to safety. I remember feeling how glad I was that it was not my job to know how to get out. I was content to follow him with the utmost confidence in his leadership."

On October 29 he wrote, during the advance: "The civilians here are a wretched, dirty, crawling community, afraid of us, some of them, and no wonder, after the shelling we gave them three weeks ago. Did I tell you that five healthy girls died of fright in one night at the last village? The people in England and France who thwarted a peaceable retirement of the enemy from these areas are therefore now sacrificing aged French peasants and charming French children to our guns. Shells made by women in Birmingham are at this moment burying little children alive not very far from here. It is rumoured that Austria has really surrendered. The new soldiers cheer when they hear these rumours, but the old ones bite their pipes, and go on cleaning their rifles, unbelieving." On October 31 he described his company headquarters as "The Smoky Cellar of the Forester's House", and insisted on the happiness that he felt there, though "so thick is the smoke that I can hardly see by a candle 12 inches away, and so thick are the inmates that I can hardly write for pokes, nudges, and jolts".

Writing to his mother, Owen repeated the words, "My nerves are in perfect order . . . I came out," he added, "in order to help these boys—directly by leading them as well as an officer can, indirectly by watching their sufferings that I may speak of them as well as a pleader can. I have done the first." He had, and he was to continue to the end, which came one week before the Armistice fell from heaven on those colourless and water-logged battle-fields. On November 4, 1918, in face of those resolute German machine-gunners who would not have yielded yet if they could have helped it, Wilfred Owen was endeavouring to pass his company over the Sambre Canal. "Zero," writes Mr. Foulkes, "was, I think, 6 A.M., and once more our Company was to lead. From the 'kicking-off trench' or road we reached the spot on the Canal which should have been temporarily bridged by the Engineers, but the plan had unfortunately failed owing to the heavy fire concentrated by machine-gunners and artillery at that particular spot. Instead of gaining the other side, we had therefore to take cover behind the Canal bank, which rose to a height of about four feet. Attempts were made to cross on rafts, but these were unsuccessful." Owen is remembered patting his men on the back as he moved about, with a "Well done!" and "You are doing very well, my boy". The Engineers who were trying to bridge the Canal almost all became casualties. Owen took a hand with some duckboards or planks, and was at the water's edge helping his men to fix them when he was hit and killed. "The battalion eventually crossed lower down by means of a bridge near the village of Ors, a few miles south of Landrécies."

The indirect part of his sacrifice was then, for a brief moment, unnecessary. Peace came, men returned home, it seemed as though all the bugles in the world might blow without ever luring one of them again into the battle. But in a short time it was apparent that the peace was imperfect, and her olive-branch might easily turn into a rifle-grenade. We are not yet sure of ourselves. A threat hangs over us even now. The transmutation even of the European tragedy into a lending-library fashion shows anew how easy it is for humanity to follow a dream, and how hard it is for the romantic Homo sapiens—the Homo rapiens of Mr. H. S. Salt—to be a realist. In the coming race there will be a multitude of mirage-builders, and the business which now engages the heart and brain of so many leaders in every country is how to save them from the normal consequences of their own illusions, or those who, for whatever purpose, encourage and exploit them. Here Owen will be found achieving his object of pleading; being dead he speaks. He speaks as a soldier, with perfect and certain knowledge of war at grips with the soldier; as a mind, surveying the whole process of wasted spirit, art, and blood in all its instant and deeper evils; as a poet, giving his readers picture and tone that whenever they are reconsidered afford a fresh profundity, for they are combinations of profound recognitions.

He was, apart from Mr. Sassoon, the greatest of the English war poets. But the term "war poets" is rather convenient than accurate. Wilfred Owen was a poet without classifications of war and peace. Had he lived, his humanity would have continued to encounter great and moving themes, the painful sometimes, sometimes the beautiful, and his art would have matched his vision. He was one of those destined beings who, without pride of self (the words of Shelley will never be excelled), "see, as from a tower, the end of all". Outwardly, he was quiet,<sup>1</sup> unobtrusive, full of good sense; inwardly, he could not help regarding the world with the dignity of a seer.

Owen was preparing himself to the last moment in experience, observation, and composition for a volume of poems, to strike at the conscience of England in regard to the continuance of the war. This volume had begun to take a definite form in his mind, which may be traced in the hastily written and obscurely amended Preface and Contents found among his papers. That they and his later poems exist at all in writing is, to all who knew, or realize, the fierce demands made on company officers in the front line and in its vicinity, a wonderful proof of his intellectual determination.

PREFACE

This book is not about heroes. English Poetry is not yet fit to speak of them.

Nor is it about deeds, or lands, nor anything about glory, honour, might, majesty, dominion, or power, except War.

Above all I am not concerned with Poetry.

My subject is War, and the pity of War.

The Poetry is in the pity.

Yet these elegies are to this generation in no sense consolatory. They may be to the next. All a poet can do to-day is warn. That is why the true Poets must be truthful.

<sup>1</sup> "My impression was that nobody knew he was a poet. Save for some snatches of conversation between him and Captain Somerville, M.C., company commander in Corbie in September 1918, in which the names Sassoon, Nation, Athenæum were mentioned, I personally never dreamt of it" (Lieut. Foulkes).

(If I thought the letter of this book would last, I might have used proper names; but if the spirit of it survives—survives Prussia—my ambition and those names will have achieved themselves fresher fields than Flanders . . . ).

* * *

His table of Contents follows, with its perplexities:

| Poem.            | Motive.   |                         | DOUBTFUL.   |
|-------------------------|--|-------------------------|---|
| Miners.                 | How the Future will forget the dead in war.                                | } Protest        | Greater Love.A Ponderous Day.                                 |
| Arms and the Boy        | } The unnaturalness of weapons.  |                         | Greater Love.Identity Disc.                                   |
| Sonnet                  |  | } Madness.              | Heaven.   |
| The Chances             | } " "  |                         | Soldier's Dream.  |
| Aliens                  |  | } Heroic Lies.          | The Seed.   |
| Letter.                 | } Inhumanity of war.   |                         | The End.  |
| Inspection              |  | } Indifference at Home. |   |
| Last Word               |  |                         |   |
| Dulce et Decorum |  |                         |   |
| Dead Beat               | Willingness of old to sacrifice young.                                     |                         |   |
| Parable.                | The insupportability of war.   |                         |   |
| S.I.W.                  | Mentality of Troops and vastness of Losses, with reflections on Civilians. |                         |   |
| Draft.                  | Horrible beastliness of war.   |                         |   |
| The Show.               | Cheerfulness and Description and Reflection.                               |                         |   |
| Next War.               |  |                         |   |
| Apology.                |  |                         |   |
| Nothing happens         | } Description. " "  |                         |   |
| The Light               |  |                         |   |
| Conscious               | } " "  |                         |   |
| Ode                     |  |                         |   |
| Anthem                  | } Grief.   |                         |   |
| Hospital Barge          |  |                         |   |
| Futility                | } Foolishness of War.  |                         |   |
| Strange Meeting.        |  |                         |   |
| Killed Asleep           | } The Soul of Soldiers.  |                         |   |
| À Terre          |  |                         |   |
| The Women and the Slain |  | Philosophy.             | Descriptive.Reflective.Allegorical.Lyric.Disgust. |

POEMS
BY
WILFRED OWEN

FROM MY DIARY, JULY 1914

Leaves

Murmuring by myriads in the shimmering trees.

Lives

Wakening with wonder in the Pyrenees.

Birds

Cheerily chirping in the early day.

Bards

Singing of summer scything thro' the hay.

Bees

Shaking the heavy dews from bloom and frond.

Boys

Bursting the surface of the ebony pond.

Flashes

Of swimmers carving thro' the sparkling cold.

Fleashes

Gleaming with wetness to the morning gold.

A mead

Bordered about with warbling water brooks.

A maid

Laughing the love-laugh with me; proud of looks.

The heat

Throbbing between the upland and the peak.

Her heart

Quivering with passion to my pressed cheek.

Braiding

Of floating flames across the mountain brow.

Brooding

Of stillness; and a sighing of the bough.

Stirs

Of leaflets in the gloom; soft petal-showers;

Stars

Expanding with the starr'd nocturnal flowers.

THE UNRETURNING

Suddenly night crushed out the day and hurled
Her remnants over cloud-peaks, thunder-walled.
Then fell a stillness such as harks appalled
When far-gone dead return upon the world.

There watched I for the Dead; but no ghost woke.
Each one whom Life exiled I named and called.
But they were all too far, or dumbled, or thralled;
And never one fared back to me or spoke.

Then peered the indefinite unshapen dawn
With vacant gloaming, sad as half-lit minds,
The weak-limned hour when sick men's sighs are drained.
And while I wondered on their being withdrawn,
Gagged by the smothering wing which none unbinds,
I dreaded even a heaven with doors so chained.

TO EROS

In that I loved you, Love, I worshipped you,
In that I worshipped well, I sacrificed
All of most worth. I bound and burnt and slew
Old peaceful lives; frail flowers; firm friends; and Christ.

I slew all falser loves; I slew all true,
That I might nothing love but your truth, Boy.
Fair fame I cast away as bridegrooms do
Their wedding garments in their haste of joy.

But when I fell upon your sandalled feet,
You laughed; you loosed away my lips; you rose.
I heard the singing of your wing's retreat;
Far-flown, I watched you flush the Olympian snows
Beyond my hoping. Starkly I returned
To stare upon the ash of all I burned.

MY SHY HAND

My shy hand shades a hermitage apart,
O large enough for thee, and thy brief hours.
Life there is sweeter held than in God's heart,
Stillter than in the heavens of hollow flowers.

The wine is gladder there than in gold bowls.
And Time shall not drain thence, nor trouble spill.
Sources between my fingers feed all souls,
Where thou mayest cool thy lips, and draw thy fill.

Five cushions hath my hand, for reveries;
And one deep pillow for thy brow's fatigues;
Langour of June all winterlong, and ease
Forever from the vain untravelled leagues.

Thither your years may gather in from storm,
And Love, that sleepeth there, will keep thee warm.

STORM

His face was charged with beauty as a cloud
With glimmering lightning. When it shadowed me
I shook, and was uneasy as a tree
That draws the brilliant danger, tremulous, bowed.

So must I tempt that face to loose its lightning.
Great gods, whose beauty is death, will laugh above,
Who made his beauty lovelier than love.
I shall be bright with their unearthly brightening.

And happier were it if my sap consume;
Glorious will shine the opening of my heart;
The land shall freshen that was under gloom;
What matter if all men cry aloud and start,
And women hide bleak faces in their shawl,
At those hilarious thunders of my fall?

October 1916.

MUSIC

I have been urged by earnest violins
And drunk their mellow sorrows to the slake
Of all my sorrows and my thirsting sins.
My heart has beaten for a brave drum's sake.
Huge chords have wrought me mighty: I have hurled
Thuds of God's thunder. And with old winds pondered
Over the curse of this chaotic world,
With low lost winds that maundered as they wandered.

I have been gay with trivial fifes that laugh;
And songs more sweet than possible things are sweet;
And gongs, and oboes. Yet I guessed not half
Life's sympathy till I had made hearts beat,
And touched Love's body into trembling cries,
And blown my love's lips into laughs and sighs.

October 1916-1917.

SHADWELL STAIR

I am the ghost of Shadwell Stair.
Along the wharves by the water-house,
And through the dripping slaughter-house,
I am the shadow that walks there.

Yet I have flesh both firm and cool,
And eyes tumultuous as the gems
Of moons and lamps in the lapping Thames
When dusk sails wavering down the pool.

Shuddering the purple street-arc burns
Where I watch always; from the banks
Dolorously the shipping clanks,
And after me a strange tide turns.

I walk till the stars of London wane
And dawn creeps up the Shadwell Stair.
But when the crowing syrens blare
I with another ghost am lain.

HAPPINESS

Ever again to breathe pure happiness,
The happiness our mother gave us, boys?
To smile at nothings, needing no caress?
Have we not laughed too often since with joys?
Have we not wrought too sick and sorrowful wrongs
For their hands' pardoning? The sun may cleanse,
And time, and starlight. Life will sing sweet songs,
And gods will show us pleasures more than men's.

But the old Happiness is unreturning.
Boy's griefs are not so grievous as youth's yearning,
Boys have no sadness sadder than our hope.
We who have seen the gods' kaleidoscope,
And played with human passions for our toys,
We know men suffer chiefly by their joys.

EXPOSURE

Our brains ache, in the merciless iced east winds that knife us . . .
 Wearied we keep awake because the night is silent . . .
 Low, drooping flares confuse our memory of the salient . . .
 Worried by silence, sentries whisper, curious, nervous,
 But nothing happens.

Watching, we hear the mad gusts tugging on the wire,
 Like twitching agonies of men among its brambles.
 Northward, incessantly, the flickering gunnery rumbles,
 Far off, like a dull rumour of some other war.
 What are we doing here?

The poignant misery of dawn begins to grow . . .
 We only know war lasts, rain soaks, and clouds sag stormy.
 Dawn massing in the east her melancholy army
 Attacks once more in ranks on shivering ranks of gray,
 But nothing happens.

Sudden successive flights of bullets streak the silence.
 Less deadly than the air that shudders black with snow,
 With sidelong flowing flakes that flock, pause, and renew,
 We watch them wandering up and down the wind's nonchalance,
 But nothing happens.

Pale flakes with fingering stealth come feeling for our faces—
 We cringe in holes, back on forgotten dreams, and stare, snow-dazed,
 Deep into grassier ditches. So we drowse, sun-dozed,
 Littered with blossoms trickling where the blackbird fusses.
 Is it that we are dying?

Slowly our ghosts drag home: glimpsing the sunk fires, glozed
With crusted dark-red jewels; crickets jingle there;
For hours the innocent mice rejoice: the house is theirs;
Shutters and doors, all closed: on us the doors are closed,—
We turn back to our dying.

Since we believe not otherwise can kind fires burn;
Nor ever suns smile true on child, or field, or fruit.
For God's invincible spring our love is made afraid;
Therefore, not loath, we lie out here; therefore were born,
For love of God seems dying.

To-night, His frost will fasten on this mud and us,
Shrivelling many hands, puckering foreheads crisp.
The burying-party, picks and shovels in their shaking grasp,
Pause over half-known faces. All their eyes are ice,
But nothing happens.

FRAGMENT: "CRAMPED IN THAT FUNNELLED HOLE"

Cramped in that funnelled hole, they watched the dawn
Open a jagged rim around; a yawn
Of death's jaws, which had all but swallowed them
Stuck in the middle of his throat of phlegm.

[And they remembered Hell has many mouths],
They were in one of many mouths of Hell
Not seen of seers in visions; only felt
As teeth of traps; when bones and the dead are smelt
Under the mud where long ago they fell
Mixed with the sour sharp odour of the shell.

FRAGMENT: "IT IS NOT DEATH"

It is not death
Without hereafter
To one in dearth
Of life and its laughter,

Nor the sweet murder
Dealt slow and even Unto the martyr
Smiling at heaven:

It is the smile
Faint as a [waning] myth,
Faint, and exceeding small
On a boy's murdered mouth.

THE PARABLE OF THE OLD MEN AND THE YOUNG

So Abram rose, and clave the wood, and went,
And took the fire with him, and a knife.
And as they sojourned both of them together,
Isaac the first-born spake and said, My Father,
Behold the preparations, fire and iron,
But where the lamb for this burnt-offering?
Then Abram bound the youth with belts and straps,
And builded parapets and trenches there,
And stretchèd forth the knife to slay his son.
When lo! an angel called him out of heaven,
Saying, Lay not thy hand upon the lad,
Neither do anything to him. Behold,
A ram, caught in a thicket by its horns;
Offer the Ram of Pride instead of him.
But the old man would not so, but slew his son,—
And half the seed of Europe, one by one.

ARMS AND THE BOY

Let the boy try along this bayonet-blade
How cold steel is, and keen with hunger of blood;
Blue with all malice, like a madman's flash;
And thinly drawn with famishing for flesh.

Lend him to stroke these blind, blunt bullet-heads
Which long to nuzzle in the hearts of lads,
Or give him cartridges of fine zinc teeth,
Sharp with the sharpness of grief and death.

For his teeth seem for laughing round an apple.
There lurk no claws behind his fingers supple;
And God will grow no talons at his heels,
Nor antlers through the thickness of his curls.

THE SHOW

We have fallen in the dreams the ever-living
 Breathe on the tarnished mirror of the world,
 And then smooth out with ivory hands and sigh.

W. B. YEATS.

My soul looked down from a vague height with Death,
 As unremembering how I rose or why,
 And saw a sad land, weak with sweats of dearth,
 Gray, cratered like the moon with hollow woe,
 And pitted with great pocks and scabs of plagues.

Across its beard, that horror of harsh wire,
 There moved thin caterpillars, slowly uncoiled.
 It seemed they pushed themselves to be as plugs
 Of ditches, where they writhed and shrivelled, killed.

By them had slimy paths been trailed and scraped
 Round myriad warts that might be little hills.

From gloom's last dregs these long-strung creatures crept,
 And vanished out of dawn down hidden holes.

(And smell came up from those foul openings
 As out of mouths, or deep wounds deepening.)

On dithering feet upgathered, more and more,
 Brown strings, towards strings of gray, with bristling spines,
 All migrants from green fields, intent on mire.

Those that were gray, of more abundant spawns,
 Ramped on the rest and ate them and were eaten.

I saw their bitten backs curve, loop, and straighten,
 I watched those agonies curl, lift, and flatten.

Whereat, in terror what that sight might mean,
I reeled and shivered earthward like a feather.

And Death fell with me, like a deepening moan.
And He, picking a manner of worm, which half had hid
Its bruises in the earth, but crawled no further,
Showed me its feet, the feet of many men,
And the fresh-severed head of it, my head.

THE SEND-OFF

Down the close, darkening lanes they sang their way
To the siding-shed,
And lined the train with faces grimly gay.

Their breasts were stuck all white with wreath and spray
As men's are, dead.

Dull porters watched them, and a casual tramp
Stood staring hard,
Sorry to miss them from the upland camp.
Then, unmoved, signals nodded, and a lamp
Winked to the guard.

So secretly, like wrongs hushed-up, they went.
They were not ours:
We never heard to which front these were sent.

Nor there if they yet mock what women meant
Who gave them flowers.

Shall they return to beatings of great bells
In wild train-loads?
A few, a few, too few for drums and yells,
May creep back, silent, to village wells
Up half-known roads.

GREATER LOVE

Red lips are not so red
 As the stained stones kissed by the English dead.
 Kindness of wooed and wooer
 Seems shame to their love pure.
 O Love, your eyes lose lure
 When I behold eyes blinded in my stead!

Your slender attitude
 Trembles not exquisite like limbs knife-skewed,
 Rolling and rolling there
 Where God seems not to care;
 Till the fierce Love they bear
 Cramps them in death's extreme decrepitude.

Your voice sings not so soft,— Though even as wind murmuring through rafters loft,—
 Your dear voice is not dear,
 Gentle, and evening clear,
 As theirs whom none now hear,
 Now earth has stopped their piteous mouths that coughed.

Heart, you were never hot,
 Nor large, nor full like hearts made great with shot;
 And though your hand be pale,
 Paler are all which trail
 Your cross through flame and hail:
 Weep, you may weep, for you may touch them not.

INSENSIBILITY

I

Happy are men who yet before they are killed
 Can let their veins run cold.
 Whom no compassion fleers
 Or makes their feet
 Sore on the alleys cobbled with their brothers.
 The front line withers,
 But they are troops who fade, not flowers
 For poets' tearful fooling:
 Men, gaps for filling:
 Losses who might have fought
 Longer; but no one bothers.

II

And some cease feeling
 Even themselves or for themselves.
 Dullness best solves
 The tease and doubt of shelling,
 And Chance's strange arithmetic
 Comes simpler than the reckoning of their shilling.
 They keep no check on armies' decimation.

III

Happy are these who lose imagination:
 They have enough to carry with ammunition.
 Their spirit drags no pack,
 Their old wounds save with cold can not more ache.
 Having seen all things red,
 Their eyes are rid
 Of the hurt of the colour of blood for ever.

And terror's first constriction over,
 Their hearts remain small-drawn.
 Their senses in some scorching cautery of battle
 Now long since ironed,
 Can laugh among the dying, unconcerned.

IV

Happy the soldier home, with not a notion
 How somewhere, every dawn, some men attack,
 And many sighs are drained.
 Happy the lad whose mind was never trained:
 His days are worth forgetting more than not.
 He sings along the march
 Which we march taciturn, because of dusk,
 The long, forlorn, relentless trend
 From larger day to huger night.

V

We wise, who with a thought besmirch
 Blood over all our soul,
 How should we see our task
 But through his blunt and lashless eyes?
 Alive, he is not vital overmuch;
 Dying, not mortal overmuch;
 Nor sad, nor proud,
 Nor curious at all.
 He cannot tell
 Old men's placidity from his.

VI

But cursed are dullards whom no cannon stuns,
 That they should be as stones;
 Wretched are they, and mean
 With paucity that never was simplicity.

By choice they made themselves immune
To pity and whatever moans in man
Before the last sea and the hapless stars;
Whatever mourns when many leave these shores;
Whatever shares
The eternal reciprocity of tears.

DULCE ET DECORUM EST

Bent double, like old beggars under sacks,
 Knock-kneed, coughing like hags, we cursed through sludge,
 Till on the haunting flares we turned our backs,
 And towards our distant rest began to trudge.
 Men marched asleep. Many had lost their boots,
 But limped on, blood-shod. All went lame, all blind;
 Drunk with fatigue; deaf even to the hoots
 Of gas-shells dropping softly behind.

Gas! Gas! Quick, boys!—An ecstasy of fumbling,
 Fitting the clumsy helmets just in time,
 But someone still was yelling out and stumbling
 And floundering like a man in fire or lime.—
 Dim through the misty panes and thick green light,
 As under a green sea, I saw him drowning.

In all my dreams before my helpless sight
 He plunges at me, guttering, choking, drowning.

If in some smothering dreams, you too could pace
 Behind the wagon that we flung him in,
 And watch the white eyes writhing in his face,
 His hanging face, like a devil's sick of sin;
 If you could hear, at every jolt, the blood
 Come gargling from the froth-corrupted lungs,
 Bitter as the cud
 Of vile, incurable sores on innocent tongues,—
 My friend, you would not tell with such high zest
 To children ardent for some desperate glory,
 The old Lie: Dulce et decorum est
 Pro patria mori.

THE DEAD-BEAT

He dropped,—more sullenly than wearily,
 Lay stupid like a cod, heavy like meat,
 And none of us could kick him to his feet;
 Just blinked at my revolver, blearily;
 —Didn't appear to know a war was on,
 Or see the blasted trench at which he stared.
 "I'll do 'em in," he whined. "If this hand's spared, I'll murder them, I will."

A low voice said,
 "It's Blighty, p'raps, he sees; his pluck's all gone,
 Dreaming of all the valiant, that aren't dead:
 Bold uncles, smiling ministerially;
 Maybe his brave young wife, getting her fun
 In some new home, improved materially.
 It's not these stiffs have crazed him; nor the Hun.

We sent him down at last, out of the way.
 Unwounded;—stout lad, too, before that strafe.
 Malingerer? Stretcher-bearers winked, "Not half
 Next day I heard the Doc.'s well-whiskied laugh:
 "That scum you sent last night soon died. Hooray

THE CHANCES

I mind as 'ow the night afore that show
 Us five got talking,—we was in the know,—
 “Over the top to-morrer; boys, we're for it.
 First wave we are, first ruddy wave; that's tore it.”
 “Ah well,” says Jimmy,—an' 'e's seen some scrappin'—
 “There ain't more nor five things as can 'appen;—
 Ye get knocked out; else wounded—bad or cushy;
 Scuppered; or nowt except yer feeling mushy.”

One of us got the knock-out, blown to chops.
 T'other was hurt like, losin' both 'is props.
 An' one, to use the word of 'ypocrites,
 'Ad the misfortoon to be took be Fritz.
 Now me, I wasn't scratched, praise God Amighty
 (Though next time please I'll thank 'im for a blighty),
 But poor young Jim, 'e's livin' an' 'e's not;
 'E reckoned 'e'd five chances, an' 'e 'ad;
 'E's wounded, killed, and pris'ner, all the lot,
 The bloody lot all rolled in one. Jim's mad.

A S L E E P

Under his helmet, up against his pack,
 After the many days of work and waking,
 Sleep took him by the brow and laid him back.
 And in the happy no-time of his sleeping,
 Death took him by the heart. There was a quaking
 Of the aborted life within him leaping . . .
 Then chest and sleepy arms once fell slack.
 And soon the slow, stray blood came creeping
 From the intrusive lead, like ants on track.

Whether his deeper sleep lie shaded by the shaking
 Of great wings, and the thoughts that hung the stars,
 High-pillowed on calm pillows of God's making
 Above these clouds, these rains, these sleets of lead,
 And these winds' scimitars;
 —Or whether yet his thin and sodden head
 Confuses more and more with the low mould,
 His hair being one with the grey grass
 And finished fields of autumns that are old . . .
 Who knows? Who hopes? Who troubles? Let it pass!
 He sleeps. He sleeps less tremulous, less cold,
 Than we who must awake, and waking, say Alas!

S. I. W.

I will to the King,
 And offer him consolation in his trouble,
 For that man there has set his teeth to die,
 And being one that hates obedience,
 Discipline, and orderliness of life,
 I cannot mourn him.

W. B. YEATS.

I. THE PROLOGUE

Patting good-bye, doubtless they told the lad
 He'd always show the Hun a brave man's face;
 Father would sooner him dead than in disgrace,—
 Was proud to see him going, ay, and glad.
 Perhaps his mother whimpered; how she'd fret
 Until he got a nice safe wound to nurse.
 Sisters would wish girls too could shoot, charge, curse;
 Brothers—would send his favourite cigarette.
 Each week, month after month, they wrote the same,
 Thinking him sheltered in some Y.M. Hut,
 Because he said so, writing on his butt
 Where once an hour a bullet missed its aim
 And misses teased the hunger of his brain.
 His eyes grew old with wincing, and his hand
 Reckless with ague. Courage leaked, as sand
 From the best sand-bags after years of rain.
 But never leave, wound, fever, trench-foot, shock,
 Untrapped the wretch. And death seemed still withheld
 For torture of lying machinally shelled,
 At the pleasure of this world's Powers who'd run amok.

He'd seen men shoot their hands, on night patrol.
 Their people never knew. Yet they were vile.

“Death sooner than dishonour, that’s the style!”
So Father said.

II. THE ACTION

One dawn, our wire patrol
Carried him. This time, Death had not missed.
We could do nothing but wipe his bleeding cough.
Could it be accident?—Rifles go off . . .
Not sniped? No. (Later they found the English ball.)

III. THE POEM

It was the reasoned crisis of his soul
Against more days of inescapable thrall,
Against infrangibly wired and blind trench wall
Curtained with fire, roofed in with creeping fire,
Slow grazing fire, that would not burn him whole
But kept him for death’s promises and scoff
And life’s half-promising, and both their riling.

IV. THE EPILOGUE

With him they buried the muzzle his teeth had kissed,
And truthfully wrote the Mother, “Tim died smiling”.

MENTAL CASES

Who are these? Why sit they here in twilight?
 Wherefore rock they, purgatorial shadows,
 Drooping tongues from jaws that slob their relish,
 Baring teeth that leer like skulls' teeth wicked?
 Stroke on stroke of pain,—but what slow panic,
 Gouged these chasms round their fretted sockets?
 Ever from their hair and through their hands' palms
 Misery swelters. Surely we have perished
 Sleeping, and walk hell; but who these hellish?

—These are men whose minds the Dead have ravished.
 Memory fingers in their hair of murders,
 Multitudinous murders they once witnessed.
 Wading sloughs of flesh these helpless wander,
 Treading blood from lungs that had loved laughter.
 Always they must see these things and hear them,
 Batter of guns and shatter of flying muscles,
 Carnage incomparable, and human squander,
 Rucked too thick for these men's extrication.

Therefore still their eyeballs shrink tormented
 Back into their brains, because on their sense
 Sunlight seems a blood-smear; night comes blood-black;
 Dawn breaks open like a wound that bleeds afresh.
 —Thus their heads wear this hilarious, hideous,
 Awful falseness of set-smiling corpses.
 —Thus their hands are plucking at each other;
 Picking at the rope-knouts of their scourging;
 Snatching after us who smote them, brother,
 Pawing us who dealt them war and madness.

FUTILITY

Move him into the sun—
Gently its touch awoke him once,
At home, whispering of fields unsown,
Always it woke him, even in France,
Until this morning and this snow.
If anything might rouse him now
The kind old sun will know.

Think how it wakes the seeds,—
Woke, once, the clays of a cold star.
Are limbs, so dear-achieved, are sides,
Full-nerved—still warm—too hard to stir?
Was it for this the clay grew tall?
—O what made fatuous sunbeams toil
To break earth's sleep at all?

CONSCIOUS

His fingers wake, and flutter; up the bed.
His eyes come open with a pull of will,
Helped by the yellow May-flowers by his head.
The blind-cord draws across the window-sill . . .
What a smooth floor the ward has! What a rug!
Who is that talking somewhere out of sight?
Why are they laughing? What's inside that jug?
"Nurse! Doctor!" "Yes; all right, all right."

But sudden evening muddles all the air—
There seems no time to want a drink of water,
Nurse looks so far away. And everywhere
Music and roses burnt through crimson slaughter.
He can't remember where he saw blue sky.
More blankets. Cold. He's cold. And yet so hot.
And there's no light to see the voices by;
There is no time to ask—he knows not what.

D I S A B L E D

He sat in a wheeled chair, waiting for dark,
 And shivered in his ghastly suit of grey,
 Legless, sewn short at elbow. Through the park
 Voices of boys rang saddening like a hymn,
 Voices of play and pleasures after day,
 Till gathering sleep had mothered them from him.

About this time Town used to swing so gay
 When glow-lamps budded in the light blue trees,
 And girls glanced lovelier as the air grew dim,—
 In the old times, before he threw away his knees.
 Now he will never feel again how slim
 Girls' waists are, or how warm their subtle hands;
 All of them touch him like some queer disease.

There was an artist silly for his face,
 For it was younger than his youth, last year.
 Now, he is old; his back will never brace;
 He's lost his colour very far from here,
 Poured it down shell-holes till the veins ran dry,
 And half his lifetime lapsed in the hot race,
 And leap of purple spurted from his thigh.

One time he liked a blood-smear down his leg,
 After the matches, carried shoulder-high.
 It was after football, when he'd drunk a peg,
 He thought he'd better join.—He wonders why.
 Someone had said he'd look a god in kilts,
 That's why; and may be, too, to please his Meg;
 Aye, that was it, to please the giddy jilts
 He asked to join. He didn't have to beg;

Smiling they wrote his lie; aged nineteen years.
 Germans he scarcely thought of; all their guilt,
 And Austria's, did not move him. And no fears
 Of Fear came yet. He thought of jewelled hilts
 For daggers in plaid socks; of smart salutes;
 And care of arms; and leave; and pay arrears;
Esprit de corps; and hints for young recruits.
 And soon he was drafted out with drums and cheers.

Some cheered him home, but not as crowds cheer Goal.
 Only a solemn man who brought him fruits
Thanked him; and then inquired about his soul.

Now, he will spend a few sick years in Institutes,
 And do what things the rules consider wise,
 And take whatever pity they may dole.
 To-night he noticed how the women's eyes
 Passed from him to the strong men that were whole.
 How cold and late it is! Why don't they come
 And put him into bed? Why don't they come?

SONNET

ON SEEING A PIECE OF OUR ARTILLERY BROUGHT INTO ACTION

Be slowly lifted up, thou long black arm,
Great gun towering toward Heaven, about to curse;
Sway steep against them, and for years rehearse
Huge imprecations like a blasting charm!
Reach at that arrogance which needs thy harm,
And beat it down before its sins grow worse;
Spend our resentment, cannon, yea, disburse
Our gold in shapes of flame, our breaths in storm.

Yet, for men's sakes whom thy vast malison
Must wither innocent of enmity,
Be not withdrawn, dark arm, thy spoilure done,
Safe to the bosom of our prosperity.
But when thy spell be cast complete and whole,
May God curse thee, and cut thee from our soul!

ANTHEM FOR DOOMED YOUTH

What passing-bells for these who die as cattle?

Only the monstrous anger of the guns.

Only the stuttering rifles' rapid rattle
Can patter out their hasty orisons.

No mockeries for them from prayers or bells,

Nor any voice of mourning save the choirs,—

The shrill, demented choirs of wailing shells;

And bugles calling for them from sad shires.

What candles may be held to speed them all?

Not in the hands of boys, but in their eyes

Shall shine the holy glimmers of good-byes.

The pallor of girls' brows shall be their pall;

Their flowers the tenderness of silent minds,

And each slow dusk a drawing-down of blinds.

THE NEXT WAR

War's a joke for me and you,
 While we know such dreams are true.
 SASSOON.

Out there, we've walked quite friendly up to Death;
 Sat down and eaten with him, cool and bland,—
 Pardoned his spilling mess-tins in our hand.
 We've sniffed the green thick odour of his breath,—
 Our eyes wept, but our courage didn't writhe.
 He's spat at us with bullets and he's coughed
 Shrapnel. We chorussed when he sang aloft;
 We whistled while he shaved us with his scythe.

Oh, Death was never enemy of ours!
 We laughed at him, we leagued with him, old chum.
 No soldier's paid to kick against his powers.
 We laughed, knowing that better men would come,
 And greater wars; when each proud fighter brags
 He wars on Death—for Life; not men—for flags.

SONG OF SONGS

Sing me at morn but only with your laugh;
Even as Spring that laugheth into leaf;
Even as Love that laugheth after Life.

Sing me but only with your speech all day,
As voluble leaflets do; let viols die;
The least word of your lips is melody!

Sing me at eve but only with your sigh!
Like lifting seas it solaceth; breathe so,
Slowly and low, the sense that no songs say.

Sing me at midnight with your murmurous heart!
Let youth's immortal-moaning chords be heard
Throbbing through you, and sobbing, unsubdued.

ALL SOUNDS HAVE BEEN AS MUSIC

All sounds have been as music to my listening:
 Pacific lamentations of slow bells,
 The crunch of boots on blue snow rosy-glistening,
 Shuffle of autumn leaves; and all farewells:

Bugles that sadden all the evening air,
 And country bells clamouring their last appeals
 Before [the] music of the evening prayer;
 Bridges, sonorous under carriage wheels.

Gurgle of sluicing surge through hollow rocks,
 The gluttonous lapping of the waves on weeds,
 Whisper of grasses; the myriad-tinkling flocks,
 The warbling drawl of flutes and shepherds' reeds.

The orchestral noises of October nights
 Blowing [ ] symphonetic storms
 Of startled clarions [ ]
 Drums, rumbling and rolling thunderous and [ ].

Thrilling of throstles in the clear blue dawn,
 Bees fumbling and fuming over sainfoin-fields.

. . . . .

VOICES

Bugles sang, saddening the evening air,
And bugles answered, sorrowful to hear.

Voices of boys were by the river-side.
Sleep mothered them; and left the twilight sad.
The shadow of the morrow weighed on men.

Voices of old despondency resigned,
Bowed by the shadow of the morrow, slept.

[                            ] dying tone
Of receding voices that will not return.
The wailing of the high far-travelling shells
And the deep cursing of the provoking [      ].

The monstrous anger of our taciturn guns.
The majesty of the insults of their mouths.

APOLOGIA PRO POEMATE MEO

I, too, saw God through mud,—
 The mud that cracked on cheeks when wretches smiled.
 War brought more glory to their eyes than blood,
 And gave their laughs more glee than shakes a child.

Merry it was to laugh there—
 Where death becomes absurd and life absurder.
 For power was on us as we slashed bones bare
 Not to feel sickness or remorse of murder.

I, too, have dropped off fear—
 Behind the barrage, dead as my platoon,
 And sailed my spirit surging, light and clear
 Past the entanglement where hopes lay strewn;

And witnessed exultation—
 Faces that used to curse me, scowl for scowl,
 Shine and lift up with passion of oblation,
 Seraphic for an hour; though they were foul.

I have made fellowships—
 Untold of happy lovers in old song.
 For love is not the binding of fair lips
 With the soft silk of eyes that look and long,

By Joy, whose ribbon slips,—
 But wound with war's hard wire whose stakes are strong;
 Bound with the bandage of the arm that drips;
 Knit in the webbing of the rifle-thong.

I have perceived much beauty
 In the hoarse oaths that kept our courage straight;

Heard music in the silentness of duty;
Found peace where shell-storms spouted reddest spate.

Nevertheless, except you share
With them in hell the sorrowful dark of hell,
Whose world is but the trembling of a flare,
And heaven but as the highway for a shell,

You shall not hear their mirth:
You shall not come to think them well content
By any jest of mine. These men are worth
Your tears. You are not worth their merriment.

November 1917.

À TERRE

(BEING THE PHILOSOPHY OF MANY SOLDIERS)

Sit on the bed. I'm blind, and three parts shell.
 Be careful; can't shake hands now; never shall.
 Both arms have mutinied against me,—brutes.
 My fingers fidget like ten idle brats.

I tried to peg out soldierly,—no use!
 One dies of war like any old disease.
 This bandage feels like pennies on my eyes.
 I have my medals?—Discs to make eyes close.
 My glorious ribbons?—Ripped from my own back
 In scarlet shreds. (That's for your poetry book.)

A short life and a merry one, my buck!
 We used to say we'd hate to live dead-old,—
 Yet now . . . I'd willingly be puffy, bald,
 And patriotic. Buffers catch from boys
 At least the jokes hurled at them. I suppose
 Little I'd ever teach a son, but hitting,
 Shooting, war, hunting, all the arts of hurting.
 Well, that's what I learnt,—that, and making money

Your fifty years ahead seem none too many?
 Tell me how long I've got? God! For one year
 To help myself to nothing more than air!
 One Spring! Is one too good to spare, too long?
 Spring wind would work its own way to my lung,
 And grow me legs as quick as lilac-shoots.

My servant's lamed, but listen how he shouts!
 When I'm lugged out, he'll still be good for that.

Here in this mummy-case, you know, I've thought
 How well I might have swept his floors for ever,
 I'd ask no nights off when the bustle's over,
 Enjoying so the dirt. Who's prejudiced
 Against a grimed hand when his own's quite dust,
 Less live than specks that in the sun-shafts turn,
 Less warm than dust that mixes with arms' tan?
 I'd love to be a sweep, now, black as Town,
 Yes; or a muckman. Must I be his load?

O Life, Life, let me breathe,—a dug-out rat!
 Not worse than ours the existences rats lead—
 Nosing along at night down some safe rut,
 They find a shell-proof home before they rot.
 Dead men may envy living mites in cheese,
 Or good germs even. Microbes have their joys,
 And subdivide, and never come to death.
 Certainly flowers have the easiest time on earth.
 "I shall be one with nature, herb, and stone",
 Shelley would tell me. Shelley would be stunned:
 The dullest Tommy hugs that fancy now.
 "Pushing up daisies" is their creed, you know.
 To grain, then, go my fat, to buds my sap,
 For all the usefulness there is in soap.
 D'you think the Boche will ever stew man-soup?
 Some day, no doubt, if . . .

Friend, be very sure

I shall be better off with plants that share
 More peaceably the meadow and the shower.
 Soft rains will touch me,—as they could touch once,
 And nothing but the sun shall make me ware.
 Your guns may crash around me. I'll not hear;
 Or, if I wince, I shall not know I wince.
 Don't take my soul's poor comfort for your jest.
 Soldiers may grow a soul when turned to fronds,
 But here the thing's best left at home with friends.

My soul's a little grief, grappling your chest,
To climb your throat on sobs; easily chased
On other sighs and wiped by fresher winds.

Carry my crying spirit till it's weaned
To do without what blood remained these wounds.

WILD WITH ALL REGRETS

(ANOTHER VERSION OF "À TERRE")

To Siegfried Sassoon

My arms have mutinied against me,—brutes!
My fingers fidget like ten idle brats,
My back's been stiff for hours, damned hours.
Death never gives his squad a Stand-at-ease.
I can't read. There: it's no use. Take your book.
A short life and a merry one, my buck!
We said we'd hate to grow dead-old. But now,
Not to live old seems awful: not to renew
My boyhood with my boys, and teach 'em hitting,
Shooting, and hunting,—all the arts of hurting!
—Well, that's what I learnt. That, and making money.
Your fifty years in store seem none too many,
But I've five minutes. God! For just two years
To help myself to this good air of yours!
One Spring! Is one too hard to spare? Too long?
Spring air would find its own way to my lung,
And grow me legs as quick as lilac-shoots.

Yes, there's the orderly. He'll change the sheets
When I'm lugged out. Oh, couldn't I do that?
Here in this coffin of a bed, I've thought
I'd like to kneel and sweep his floors for ever,—
And ask no nights off when the bustle's over,
For I'd enjoy the dirt. Who's prejudiced
Against a grimed hand when his own's quite dust,—
Less live than specks that in the sun-shafts turn?
Dear dust—in rooms, on roads, on faces' tan!

I'd love to be a sweep's boy, black as Town;
Yes, or a muckman. Must I be his load?
A flea would do. If one chap wasn't bloody,
Or went stone-cold, I'd find another body.

Which I shan't manage now. Unless it's yours.
I shall stay in you, friend, for some few hours.
You'll feel my heavy spirit chill your chest,
And climb your throat on sobs, until it's chased
On sighs, and wiped from off your lips by wind.

I think on your rich breathing, brother, I'll be weaned
To do without what blood remained me from my wound.

December 5, 1917.

WINTER SONG

The browns, the olives, and the yellows died,
And were swept up to heaven; where they glowed
Each dawn and set of sun till Christmastide,
And when the land lay pale for them, pale-snowed,
Fell back, and down the snow-drifts flamed and flowed.

From off your face, into the winds of winter,
The sun-brown and the summer-gold are blowing;
But they shall gleam [again] with spiritual glinter,
When paler beauty on your brows falls snowing,
And through those snows my looks shall be soft-going.

October 18, 1917.

HOSPITAL BARGE AT CÉRISY

Budging the sluggard ripples of the Somme,
A barge round old Cérisy slowly slewed.
Softly her engines down the current screwed
And chuckled in her, with contented hum.
Till fairy tinklings struck their crooning dumb,
And waters rumpling at the stern subdued.
The lock-gate took her bulging amplitude.
Gently into the gurgling lock she swum.

One reading by that sunset raised his eyes
To watch her lessening westward quietly;
Till, as she neared the bend, her funnel screamed.
And that long lamentation made him wise
How unto Avalon in agony
Kings passed in the dark barge which Merlin dreamed.

December 8, 1917.

SIX O'CLOCK IN PRINCES STREET

In twos and threes, they have not far to roam,
Crowds that thread eastward, gay of eyes;
Those seek no further than their quiet home,
Wives, walking westward, slow and wise.

Neither should I go fooling over clouds,
Following gleams unsafe, untrue,
And tiring after beauty through star-crowds,
Dared I go side by side with you;

Or be you on the gutter where you stand,
Pale rain-flawed phantom of the place,
With news of all the nations in your hand,
And all their sorrows in your face.

THE ROADS ALSO

The roads also have their wistful rest,
 When the weathercocks perch still and roost,
 And the town is [quiet like] a candle-lit room—
 The streets also dream their dream.

The old houses muse of the old days
 And their fond trees leaning on them doze,
 On their steps chatter and clatter stops,
 On their doors a strange hand taps.

Men remember alien [                    ] ardours
 As the dusk unearths old mournful odours.
 In the garden unborn child souls wail
 And the dead scribble on walls.

Though their own child cry for them in tears,
 Women weep but hear no sound upstairs.
 They believe in loves they had not lived
 And in passion past the reach of the stairs
     To the world's towers or stars.

THIS IS THE TRACK

This is the track my life is setting on,<sup>4</sup>
Spacious the spanless way I wend;
The blackness of darkness may be held for me?
And barren plunging without end?

Why dare I fear? For other wandering souls
Burn thro' the night of that far bourne.
And they are light unto themselves; and aureoles
Self-radiated there are worn.

And when in after-times we make return
Round solar bounds awhile to run,
They gather many satellites astern
And turn aside the very sun.

THE CALLS

A dismal fog-hoarse siren howls at dawn.
I watch the man it calls for, pushed and drawn
Backwards and forwards, helpless as a pawn.
    But I'm lazy, and his work's crazy.

Quick treble bells begin at nine o'clock,
Scuttling the schoolboy pulling up his sock,
Scaring the late girl in the inky frock.
    I must be crazy; I learn from the daisy.

Stern bells annoy the rooks and doves at ten.
I watch the verger close the doors, and when
I hear the organ moan the first amen,
    Sing my religions—same as pigeons.

A blatant bugle tears my afternoons.
Out clump the clumsy Tommies by platoons,
Trying to keep in step with rag-time tunes,
    But I sit still; I've done my drill.

MINERS

There was a whispering in my hearth,
A sigh of the coal,
Grown wistful of a former earth
It might recall.

I listened for a tale of leaves
And smothered ferns;
Fron-d-forests; and the low, sly lives
Before the fawns.

My fire might show steam-phantoms simmer
From Time's old cauldron,
Before the birds made nests in summer,
Or men had children.

But the coals were murmuring of their mine,
And moans down there
Of boys that slept wry sleep, and men
Writhing for air.

And I saw white bones in the cinder-shard.
Bones without number;
For many hearts with coal are charred
And few remember.

I thought of some who worked dark pits
Of war, and died
Digging the rock where Death reposes
Peace lies indeed.

Comforted years will sit soft-chaired
In rooms of amber;

The years will stretch their hands, well-cheered
By our lives' ember.

The centuries will burn rich loads
With which we groaned,
Whose warmth shall lull their dreaming lids
While songs are crooned.
But they will not dream of us poor lads
Lost in the ground.

AND I MUST GO

Gongs hum and buzz like saucepan-lid at dusk,
I see a food-hog whet his gold-filled tusk
To eat less bread, and more luxurious rusk.

Then sometimes late at night my window bumps
From gunnery-practice, till my small heart thumps
And listens for the shell-shrieks and the crumps,
But that's not all.

For leaning out last midnight on my sill
I heard the sighs of men, that have no skill
To speak of their distress, no, nor the will!
A voice I know. And I must go.

THE PROMISERS

When I awoke, the glancing day looked gay;
The air said: Fare you fleetly; you will meet him!
And when the prosp'rous sun was well begun,
I heard a bird say: Sweetly you shall greet him!

The sun felt strong and bold upon my shoulder;
It hung, it clung as it were my friend's arm.
The birds fied on before, shrill-piping pipers,
Right down to town; and there they ceased to charm.

And there I wandered till the noon came soon,
And chimed: The time is hastening with his face!
Sly twilight said: I bring him; wait till late!
But darkness harked forlorn to my lone pace.

TRAINING

Not this week nor this month dare I lie down
In languor under lime trees or [smooth smile].
Love must not kiss my face pale that is brown.

My lips, parting, shall drink space, mile by mile;
Strong meats be all my hunger; my renown
Be the clean beauty of speed and pride of style.

Cold winds encountered on the racing Down
Shall thrill my heated bareness; but awhile
None else may meet me till I wear my Crown.

June 1918.

THE KIND GHOSTS

She sleeps on soft, last breaths; but no ghost looms
Out of the stillness of her palace wall,
Her wall of boys on boys and dooms on dooms.

She dreams of golden gardens and sweet glooms,
Not marvelling why her roses never fall
Nor what red mouths were torn to make their blooms.

The shades keep down which well might roam her hall.
Quiet their blood lies in her crimson rooms
And she is not afraid of their footfall.

They move not from her tapestries, their pall,
Nor pace her terraces, their hecatombs,
Lest aught she be disturbed, or grieved at all.

TO MY FRIEND

(WITH AN IDENTITY DISC)

If ever I had dreamed of my dead name
High in the heart of London, unsurpassed
By Time for ever, and the Fugitive, Fame,
There seeking a long sanctuary at last,—

Or if I onetime hoped to hide its shame,
—Shame of success, and sorrow of defeats,—
Under those holy cypresses, the same
That shade always the quiet place of Keats,

Now rather thank I God there is no risk
Of gravers scoring it with florid screeed.
Let my inscription be this soldier's disc. . . .
Wear it, sweet friend, inscribe no date nor deed.
But may thy heart-beat kiss it, night and day,
Until the name grow blurred and fade away.

1918.

INSPECTION

"You! What d'you mean by this?" I rapped.
 "You dare come on parade like this?"
 "Please, sir, it's——" "'Old yer mouth," the sergeant snapped.
 "I take 'is name, sir?"—"Please, and then dismiss."

Some days "confined to camp" he got
 For being "dirty on parade".
 He told me afterwards, the damned spot
 Was blood, his own. "Well, blood is dirt," I said.

"Blood's dirt," he laughed, looking away
 Far off to where his wound had bled
 And almost merged for ever into clay.
 "The world is washing out its stains," he said.
 "It doesn't like our cheeks so red.
 Young blood's its great objection.
 But when we're duly white-washed, being dead,
 The race will bear Field-Marshal God's inspection."

FRAGMENT: A FAREWELL

I saw his round mouth's crimson deepen as it fell,
Like a Sun, in his last deep hour;
Watched the magnificent recession of farewell,
Clouding, half gleam, half glower,
And a last splendour burn the heavens of his cheek.
And in his eyes
The cold stars lighting, very old and bleak,
In different skies.

FRAGMENT: THE ABYSS OF WAR

As bronze may be much beautified
By lying in the dark damp soil,
So men who fade in dust of warfare fade
Fairer, and sorrow blooms their soul.

Like pearls which noble women wear
And, tarnishing, awhile confide
Unto the old salt sea to feed,
Many return more lustrous than they were.

But what of them buried profound,
Buried where we can no more find,
Who [ ]
Lie dark for ever under abysmal war?

AT A CALVARY NEAR THE ANCRE

One ever hangs where shelled roads part.
In this war He too lost a limb,
But His disciples hide apart;
And now the Soldiers bear with Him.

Near Golgotha strolls many a priest,
And in their faces there is pride
That they were flesh-marked by the Beast
By whom the gentle Christ's denied.

The scribes on all the people shove
And bawl allegiance to the state,
But they who love the greater love
Lay down their life; they do not hate.

LE CHRISTIANISME

So the church Christ was hit and buried
Under its rubbish and its rubble.
In cellars, packed-up saints lie serried,
Well out of hearing of our trouble.

One Virgin still immaculate
Smiles on for war to flatter her.
She's halo'd with an old tin hat,
But a piece of hell will batter her.

QUIVIÈRES.

SPRING OFFENSIVE

Halted against the shade of a last hill,
They fed, and, lying easy, were at ease
And, finding comfortable chests and knees,
Carelessly slept. But many there stood still
To face the stark, blank sky beyond the ridge,
Knowing their feet had come to the end of the world.

Marvelling they stood, and watched the long grass swirled
By the May breeze, murmurous with wasp and midge,
For though the summer oozed into their veins
Like an injected drug for their bodies' pains,
Sharp on their souls hung the imminent line of grass,
Fearfully flashed the sky's mysterious glass.

Hour after hour they ponder the warm field—
And the far valley behind, where the buttercup
Had blessed with gold their slow boots coming up,
Where even the little brambles would not yield,
But clutched and clung to them like sorrowing hands;
They breathe like trees unstirred.

Till like a cold gust thrills the little word
At which each body and its soul begird
And tighten them for battle. No alarms
Of bugles, no high flags, no clamorous haste—
Only a lift and flare of eyes that faced
The sun, like a friend with whom their love is done.
O larger shone that smile against the sun,—
Mightier than his whose bounty these have spurned.

So, soon they topped the hill, and raced together
Over an open stretch of herb and heather

Exposed. And instantly the whole sky burned
With fury against them; earth set sudden cups
In thousands for their blood; and the green slope
Chasmed and steepened sheer to infinite space.

. . . . .
Of them who running on that last high place
Leapt to swift unseen bullets, or went up
On the hot blast and fury of hell's upsurge,
Or plunged and fell away past this world's verge,
Some say God caught them even before they fell.

But what say such as from existence' brink
Ventured but drave too swift to sink,
The few who rushed in the body to enter hell,
And there out-fiending all its fiends and flames
With superhuman inhumanities,
Long-famous glories, immemorial shames—
And crawling slowly back, have by degrees
Regained cool peaceful air in wonder—
Why speak not they of comrades that went under?

THE SENTRY

We'd found an old Boche dug-out, and he knew,
 And gave us hell, for shell on frantic shell
 Hammered on top, but never quite burst through.
 Rain, guttering down in waterfalls of slime
 Kept slush waist-high that, rising hour by hour,
 Choked up the steps too thick with clay to climb.
 What murk of air remained stank old, and sour
 With fumes of whizz-bangs, and the smell of men
 Who'd lived there years, and left their curse in the den,
 If not their corpses. . . .

There we herded from the blast
 Of whizz-bangs, but one found our door at last,— Buffeting eyes and breath, snuffing the candles.
 And thud! flump! thud! down the steep steps came thumping
 And splashing in the flood, deluging muck—
 The sentry's body; then, his rifle, handles
 Of old Boche bombs, and mud in ruck on ruck.
 We dredged him up, for killed, until he whined
 "O sir, my eyes—I'm blind—I'm blind, I'm blind!"
 Coaxing, I held a flame against his lids
 And said if he could see the least blurred light
 He was not blind; in time he'd get all right.
 "I can't," he sobbed. Eyeballs, huge-bulged like squids',
 Watch my dreams still; but I forgot him there
 In posting next for duty, and sending a scout
 To beg a stretcher somewhere, and floundering about
 To other posts under the shrieking air.

Those other wretches, how they bled and spewed,
 And one who would have drowned himself for good,—
 I try not to remember these things now.

Let dread hark back for one word only: how Half listening to that sentry's moans and jumps,
And the wild chattering of his broken teeth,
Renewed most horribly whenever crumps
Pummelled the roof and slogged the air beneath—
Through the dense din, I say, we heard him shout
"I see your lights!" But ours had long died out.

SMILE, SMILE, SMILE

Head to limp head, the sunk-eyed wounded scanned
 Yesterday's Mail; the casualties (typed small)
 And (large) Vast Booty from our Latest Haul.
 Also, they read of Cheap Homes, not yet planned
 For, said the paper, "When this war is done
 The men's first instinct will be making homes.
 Meanwhile their foremost need is aerodromes,
 It being certain war has but begun.
 Peace would do wrong to our undying dead,—
 The sons we offered might regret they died
 If we got nothing lasting in their stead.
 We must be solidly indemnified.
 Though all be worthy Victory which all bought,
 We rulers sitting in this ancient spot
 Would wrong our very selves if we forgot
 The greatest glory will be theirs who fought,
 Who kept this nation in integrity."
 Nation?—The half-limbed readers did not chafe
 But smiled at one another curiously
 Like secret men who know their secret safe.
 (This is the thing they know and never speak,
 That England one by one had fled to France,
 Not many elsewhere now save under France.)
 Pictures of these broad smiles appear each week,
 And people in whose voice real feeling rings
 Say: How they smile! They're happy now, poor things.

23rd September 1918.

THE END

After the blast of lightning from the East,
The flourish of loud clouds, the Chariot Throne;
After the drums of Time have rolled and ceased,
And by the bronze west long retreat is blown,

Shall life renew these bodies? Of a truth
All death will He annul, all tears assuage?—
Fill the void veins of Life again with youth,
And wash, with an immortal water, Age?

When I do ask white Age he saith not so:
“My head hangs weighed with snow.”
And when I hearken to the Earth, she saith:
“My fiery heart shrinks, aching. It is death.
Mine ancient scars shall not be glorified,
Nor my titanic tears, the sea, be dried.”

STRANGE MEETING

It seemed that out of battle I escaped
Down some profound dull tunnel, long since scooped
Through granites which titanic wars had groined.
Yet also there encumbered sleepers groaned,
Too fast in thought or death to be bestirred.
Then, as I probed them, one sprang up, and stared
With piteous recognition in fixed eyes,
Lifting distressful hands as if to bless.
And by his smile, I knew that sullen hall,
By his dead smile I knew we stood in Hell.
With a thousand pains that vision's face was grained;
Yet no blood reached there from the upper ground,
And no guns thumped, or down the flues made moan.
"Strange friend," I said, "here is no cause to mourn."
"None," said the other, "save the undone years,
The hopelessness. Whatever hope is yours,
Was my life also; I went hunting wild
After the wildest beauty in the world,
Which lies not calm in eyes, or braided hair,
But mocks the steady running of the hour,
And if it grieves, grieves richlier than here.
For by my glee might many men have laughed,
And of my weeping something had been left,
Which must die now. I mean the truth untold,
The pity of war, the pity war distilled.
Now men will go content with what we spoiled.
Or, discontent, boil bloody, and be spilled.
They will be swift with swiftness of the tigress,
None will break ranks, though nations trek from progress.
Courage was mine, and I had mystery,
Wisdom was mine, and I had mastery;
To miss the march of this retreating world

Into vain citadels that are not walled.
Then, when much blood had clogged their chariot-wheels
I would go up and wash them from sweet wells,
Even with truths that lie too deep for taint.
I would have poured my spirit without stint
But not through wounds; not on the cess of war.
Foreheads of men have bled where no wounds were.
I am the enemy you killed, my friend.
I knew you in this dark; for so you frowned
Yesterday through me as you jabbed and killed.
I parried; but my hands were loath and cold.
Let us sleep now. . . .”

NOTES

NOTES

The Unreturning

THIS splendid sonnet is given in the form arrived at in a late revision; but the first version is scarcely less powerful. Its date would seem to be 1914:

Implacable night crushed out the day, and hurled
 The remnants of the light behind the Vald.
 Then { fell a stillness such as harks,
       { stillness listened, cowed, as if bones crawled,
       Or }
 And } far-gone dead returned upon the world.
 I thought upon those dead, all dumb, all thrall'd;
 I yearned towards life's exiles, and I called,
 But never one fared back to me, none spoke,
 Nor any sleeper out of hades woke.
 Then yawned the premature, unshapen dawn,
 The hopeless gloam, as sad as formless minds,
 And 'twas the hour when sick men's life is drained.
 And as I wondered on them, being withdrawn,
 Gagged by the smothering dark, whence None unbinds,
 I dreaded ev'n a heaven with doors so chained.

Shadwell Stair

Another version has the second stanza thus:

Yet I have flesh that is firm and cool
 And eyes like the blue tumultuous gems
 Of the moons and the lamps in the full Thames
 When the night has anchored in the Pool.

For "crowing syrens" in the last line but one, "morning hooters" is written.

Happiness

From the later version of two MSS. marked "Final", but with some parts struck out and nothing substituted. The sextet of the earlier copy reads:

Yet heaven looks smaller than the old doll's-home,
 No nestling place is left in bluebell bloom,
 And the wide arms of trees have lost their scope.
 The former happiness is unreturning:
 Boys' griefs are not so grievous as our yearning,
 Boys have no sadness sadder than our hope.

A letter of August 8, 1917, quoted on p. 26 of the Memoir above, throws light on Owen's poetical purpose and this poem's revision.

Exposure

Owen dates this poem February 1916, but I take that to be a slip of the pen for 1917. The last stanza is heavily corrected and re-corrected, and the text printed may not be absolutely what Owen intended.

The Parable

In the previous edition, the final line was omitted, and certainly to the advantage of the whole epigram; but I could not find a manuscript authority for following this.

The Show

Here may be introduced the traces of another Hardy-esque vision, apparently all that Owen completed of what he intended to be "An Imperial Elegy" or "Libretto for Marche Funèbre":

Not one corner of a foreign field
 But a span as wide as Europe,
 Deep as [            ].
 I looked and saw.
 An appearance of a titan's grave,
 And the length thereof a thousand miles.
 It crossed all Europe like a mystic road,

Or as the Spirits' Pathway lieth on the night.
 And I heard a voice crying,
 This is the Path of Glory.

Dulce et Decorum est

Another version—it was a poem over which the author took much trouble—is addressed “To a Certain Poetess”—i.e. to the type of those who provided the public from day to day with cheerful patriotic jingles.

Bent double, like old beggars under sacks,
 Knock-kneed, coughing like hags, we cursed through
 sludge,

Till on the clawing flares we turned our backs,
 And towards our distant rest began to trudge,
 Dragging the worst amongst us, who'd no boots
 But limped on, blood-shod. All went lame; all blind;
 Drunk with fatigue; deaf even to the hoots
 Of tired, outstripped five-nines that dropped behind.

Then somewhere near in front: Whew . . . fup . . .
 fop . . . fup . . .

Gas shells or duds? We loosened masks in case—
 And listened . . . Nothing . . . Far rumouring of Krupp . . .

Then smartly, poison hit us in the face.
 Gas! GAS! Quick, boys!—An ecstasy of fumbling,
 Fitting the clumsy helmets, just in time.
 But someone still was yelling out, and stumbling,
 And floundering like a man in fire or lime.

Dim, through the misty panes and heavy light,
 As under a dark sea, I saw him drowning.
 In all my dreams, before my helpless sight
 He lunges at me, guttering, choking, drowning.

In all your dreams if you could slowly pace
 Behind the limber that we flung him in,
 And watch the white eyes turning in his face,
 His hanging face, like a devil's dead of sin;

If you could hear, at every jolt, the blood
 Come gargling thick and frothy from the lung;
 And think how once his face was like a bud,
 Fresh as a country rose, and keen, and young,
 You'd not go telling with such noble zest,
 To small boys, ardent for some desperate glory,
 The old lie: Dulce et decorum est
 Pro patria mori.

S.I.W.

The abbreviation for "Self-Inflicted Wound". "This study", Owen notes, "consists of four pieces. I.: The Prologue—a sat'ire. II.: The Incident—narrative. III.: The Apology—a poem. IV.: The Epilogue—a cynicism." The text towards the close seems not to have received the author's last touches.

Mental Cases

The title was struck out and "Aliens" substituted, but Owen then returned to the first. The poem seems to be a fragment, for three or four words of another paragraph were written.

Hospital Barge at Cérisy

"I will copy out Sunday morning's effort, due to a Saturday night revel in 'The Passing of Arthur'."

W. O.

The Roads Also

Two manuscripts came before me, both imperfect; it is uncertain whether Owen eventually preferred a stanza of four lines or of five. The following lacks the last stanza given in the main text (in which the closing line was originally "Of the inaccessible stars"):

The roads also have their wistful rest
 When the weathercocks perch still and roost
 [And the looks of men turn kind to clocks
 And the trams go empty to their drome.
 The streets also dream their dream.]

The old houses muse of the old days,
 And their fond trees lean on them and doze.
 On their steps chatter and clatter stops,
 For the cries of other times hold men
     And they [hear] the [unknown] moan.

They remember alien ardours and far futures,
 And the smiles not seen in happy features.
 Their begetters call them from the gutters.
 In the garden unborn child souls wail
     And the dead scribble on walls.

Miners

In a letter to his mother of January or February 14, 1918, Owen says: "Wrote a poem on the Colliery Disaster: but I get mixed up with the War at the end. It is short, but oh! sour!"

Spring Offensive

Part of this was sent to Mr. Sassoon in a letter of September 22, 1918, with the question, "Is this worth going on with? I don't want to write anything to which a soldier would say No Compris!"

The Sentry

Also sent to Mr. Sassoon on September 22, 1918: " 'The Blind'. [Please confer title if worthy.] "

Strange Meeting

This unfinished poem, the most remote and intimate, tranquil and dynamic, of all Owen's imaginative statements of war experience, is without a date in the only MS. seen by the present editor; it probably belongs to the last months of the prophetic soldier's life. The MS. is written in ink and corrected in pencil. The following discarded readings will be found significant:

- l. 1. It seemed that from my dug-out I escaped
 10. Yet slumber droned all down that sullen hall.
 11. With a thousand fears that creature's face was grained;

Between l. 13 and l. 14 another line occurred:

But all was sleep. And no voice called for men.

- l. 14. "My friend,"
 16. The unachieved.
 25. The pity of war, the one thing war distilled.
 36. Even the { thoughts that lie
                   { wells I sank
 38. But not my blood into the mire of war.
 40. { I was a German conscript, and your friend.
       { I am the German whom you killed, my friend.

But although "Strange Meeting" itself exists, to the best of my knowledge, only in one copy, Owen spent great labour on a poem either parallel with it, or at length interwoven with it, written in separated couplets. Of this piece, partaking of the inspiration of the other, several rough transcriptions are available. The following is an attempt to show the variants compactly yet completely, since, with a mind and sensibility like Owen's at their deepest, even rejected words recorded some valuable originality:

i., ii., iii.

Earth's wheels run oiled with blood. Forget we that.
 Let us { lie down and dig ourselves in thought.
        { turn back to beauty and to thought.
        { turn back with beauty and with thought.

Beauty is yours, and you have mastery,
 Wisdom is mine, and I have mystery.

[We two will stay behind and keep our troth.
 Let us lie out and hold the open truth.]

Let us forgo men's minds that are brutes' natures.
 Let us not sup the blood which some say nurtures.

Be we not swift with swiftness of the tigress.
 { Let us break ranks and we will trek from progress.
 { Let us break ranks from those who trek from progress.
 { Better break ranks than follow men from progress.

Miss we the march of this retreating world
 Into {old } citadels that are not walled.
 {vain }

Then when their blood hath clogged {the } chariot-
 {their } wheels
 We will go up and wash them from deep wells.

What though } we sink from men as pitchers falling,
 For now }
 Many } shall raise us up to be their filling
 But men }

Even from wells we sunk too deep for war,
 Even as One who bled }
 The same whose faces bled } where no wounds were.
 And filled by brows that bled }

iv., v., vi.

So earth spins, oiled with blood. } Forget we that.
 Earths spin in blood-oiled wheels. }
 Let us lie down and think no more {of } thought {men's }

Let us forgo our rank and seniority,
 [Let us] fall out from fleeing from futurity.
 Beauty is {yours, } and {you } have mastery,
 {mine, }
 Wisdom is {mine, } and {I } have mystery.
 {yours, } {you }

[Let us forgo men's minds that are brutes' natures.
Let us not drink war-blood which some say nurtures

Be we not swift with swiftness of the tigress.
Let us fall out from them that trek from progress.

Miss we the march of this retreating world

Into {<sup>low</sup> its } citadels that are not walled.

But } when their blood {<sup>has</sup>
And } {<sup>hath</sup> } clogged the chariot wheels
We will go up and wash them from deep wells.

For now we sink from men as pitchers falling,
But men shall raise us up to be their filling.

Even from wells we sunk too deep for war,
Even the sweetest wells }
Even the clearest wells } that ever were.
The waters of all brows }

Finally, it may be remarked that, widely as the setting and substance of "Strange Meeting" are felt and apprehended, it is peculiarly a poem of the Western Front; it is a dream only a stage further on than the actuality of the tunnelled dug-outs with their muffled security, their smoky dimness, their rows of soldiers painfully sleeping, their officers and sergeants and corporals attempting to awaken those for duty, and the sense presently of "going up" the ugly stairway to do someone in the uglier mud above a good turn. Out of those and similar materials Owen's transforming spirit has readily created his wonderful phantasma.

Bold Horatius, and Beauty

I cannot close these Notes without printing two short pieces, highly illustrative, in their different directions, of Owen's way of thinking:

BOLD HORATIUS

Having, with bold Horatius, stamped her feet
 And waved a final [fisty] arabesque
 O'er the brave days of old, she ceased to bleat,
 Slapped her Macaulay back upon the desk,
 Resumed her calm gaze and her lofty seat.

There, while she heard the classic lines repeat,
 Once more the teacher's face clenched stern;
 For through the window, looking on the street,
 Three soldiers hailed her. She made no return.
 One was called 'Orace whom she would not greet.

BEAUTY

The beautiful, the fair, the elegant,
 Is that which pleases us, says Kant,
 Without a thought of interest or advantage.

I used to watch men when they spoke of beauty
 And measure their enthusiasm. One,
 An old man, seeing a [ ] setting sun
 Praised it [ ] a certain sense of duty
 To the calm evening and his time of life.
 I know another man that never says a Beauty
 But of a horse;

Men seldom speak of beauty, beauty as such,
 Not even lovers think about it much.
 Women of course consider it for hours
 In mirrors;

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

By the kindness of Mr. Frank Nicholson, librarian of Edinburgh University, I am enabled to print these excellent reminiscences of Owen in 1917:

It was at the house of my friends, Captain and Mrs. Gray, in St. Bernard Crescent, Edinburgh, that I first met Owen in the autumn of 1917, and even before I had exchanged a word with him I was conscious of that immediate attraction which his presence seems to have exercised on a great number of people. It was not merely the attraction of youth with comeliness: it was rather, I think, that the youth and comeliness were so strongly expressive of the personality behind them. His eyes were, I suppose, what struck one first in his appearance—dark and vivid eyes, flashing now and then a startled look that indicated quickness of apprehension and extreme sensitiveness. The mouth emphasized that sensitiveness, but also counteracted it to some extent by the firmness of its lines; and indeed the charm of the face consisted largely in its combination of qualities not usually found together. There was something at once clear-cut and fluid about the features, and the figure had the elegant compactness of a small boy's together with the robuster development of the young man's. This union of opposites was, I fancy, characteristic of his whole personality, and may perhaps explain his power of inspiring affection in men and women alike. The sentiment he aroused was one both of tenderness and admiration.

At the time I am speaking of, Owen was invalided at Craiglockhart Hospital. He had brought with him from the Front a very keen realization of the agony which the combatant nations, one and all, were enduring, and his sense of pity, which must have been strong in him by nature and had been intensified by his experiences, enabled him to regard Germany as a fellow-sufferer with the rest and made him wish, I think, to prepare himself for any future opportunities of holding intercourse with the Germans. At any rate, he expressed a regret that he knew no German and a desire to learn a little while he was in Edinburgh; and I told him how pleased I should be to give him a few lessons if he could find time to come to the University Library occasionally on an afternoon. He accepted this offer, and came a few days later for the first lesson of a course which was unfortunately to be broken short almost at once by his unforeseen departure from Edinburgh. Such as it was, however, I think he enjoyed it; we started reading a German novel at once, picking up the essentials of grammar by the way, so to speak, and his quick intelligence and literary aptitude made him a delightful pupil.

It was after the last of these lessons—there were only three or four of them altogether, if I am not mistaken—that he took me with him to have afternoon tea in a café, and this is the incident that stands out most clearly in my memory of him. It was really the only occasion on which he had an opportunity of speaking freely to me, and it was then that I got a hint of the effect that the horrors he had seen and heard of at the Front had made upon him. He did not enlarge upon them, but they were obviously always in his thoughts, and he wished that an obtuse world should be made sensible of them. With this object he was collecting a set of photographs exhibiting the ravages of war upon the men who took part in it—mutilations, wounds, surgical operations, and the like. He had some of these photographs with him, and I remember that he put his hand to his breast-pocket to show me them, but suddenly thought better of it and refrained. No doubt he felt that the sight of them would be painful to me, and perhaps also that such methods of propaganda were superfluous in my case.

The other subject about which he talked on that occasion was literature. His interest in it was unmistakable: the problem of literary form was an absorbing one for him, and he felt that he had found, or was finding, an adequate medium in which to express himself in verse. I do not know whether he had published any of his poems at that time; if so, I had not seen them. But he told me of his idea of substituting a play of vowels for pure rhyme, and spoke of the effects that could be obtained from this device with an engaging assurance and perhaps a touch of wilfulness, like that of a child insisting, half humorously and half defiantly, that he is in the right. Possibly I did not accept his thesis quite as cordially as I should have done, and indeed I doubt if I fully comprehended it, for I have some recollection of remarking to him, a little ineptly, that he would find it foreshadowed in a passage of John Halsham's Idlehurst.

I do not think I ever met him alone again after that. He left Edinburgh and eventually returned to France, as, knowing what he did and feeling as he did about the War, he was, I suppose, bound to do. He was one of those to whom the miseries of the world are misery and will not let them rest, and he went back to spend his life in doing what he could to palliate them.

FRANK NICHOLSON

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY

BIERCE, AMBROSE

In the Midst of Life

Weird and thrilling tales, many of them concerning the American Civil War, by one of the greatest of American short story writers. (54)

BIRRELL, AUGUSTINE

Et Cetera

Literary essays, including "Boswell Disrobed," "John Bunyan," "No Crabb, No Christmas," "Thomas Love Peacock," etc. (59)

BRIDGE, ANN

Peking Picnic

Miss Bridge's novel of China, her first, was awarded the Atlantic monthly prize, and ever since its first publication has proved a best-seller, both in England and America.

(107)

CHESTERTON, G. K.

A Short History of England (35)

DOUGLAS, NORMAN

How about Europe?

A biting and very pointed reply to Katherine Mayo's Mother India. (66)

In the Beginning

A fantasy, which, as the Times Literary Supplement said, shows Mr. Douglas's imaginative powers at their best. (42)

FAULKNER, WILLIAM

Light in August

This is Mr. Faulkner's longest novel, and is considered by many critics to be his best. Of all the younger American writers he is the most experimental, and certainly among the most original. (99)

Sanctuary

A novel. (83)

FOTHERGILL, JOHN

An Innkeeper's Diary

Few innkeepers, alas, have kept diaries. None have been better worth keeping than that written at the 'Spreadeagle,' Thame. (88)

FREEMAN, H. W.

Joseph and His Brethren

Mr. Freeman's first novel has retained its popularity for many years. His scene is Suffolk, a county which he depicts with knowledge and tenderness. (91)

FRY, ROGER

Vision and Design

Essays on art by one of the most distinguished of twentieth century critics. (15)

GARNETT, DAVID

Beany-eye

A story. "It is, I think, Mr. Garnett's best book," Spectator. (112)

The Grasshoppers Come and A Rabbit in the Air (1 Vol.)

The first of these two books is an exciting narrative of a long-distance flight which was within an ace of ending in disaster. The second is Mr. Garnett's account of how he himself learnt to fly. (101)

Lady into Fox and A Man in the Zoo. (1 Vol.)

Lady into Fox, Mr. Garnett's first story, won the Hawthornden Prize and the James Tait Black Memorial Prize. It is here reprinted together with his second book, A Man in the Zoo. (7)

No Love

A modern novel which, as the Observer said, shows the author to be one of the few younger writers "clearly and obviously possessed of genius." (75)

The Sailors' Return

A story, its scene in Dorset, which the Empire Review rightly described as a masterpiece. (21)

HALDANE, J. B. S.

Possible Worlds

One of the most fascinating books of scientific essays published during the present century, and only equalled in its particular appeal by Mr. Haldane's Inequality of Man. It is pithy, clear, and packed with ideas brilliantly expounded. (52)

HAYWARD, JOHN

Nineteenth Century Poetry

An Anthology. (78)

HEARD, GERALD

These Hurrying Years

An historical outline of the first third of the present century : a critical survey not merely of events, but of trends and discoveries. (105)

HUGHES, RICHARD

Confessio Juvenis

Poems. (98)

A High Wind in Jamaica

Mr. Hughes' immensely successful novel, which was awarded the Femina Vie Heureuse Prize. The penetrating and unsentimental portrayal of children will always arouse the keenest controversy. (73)

A Moment of Time

Stories. (51)

Plays

Containing "The Sister's Tragedy," "A Comedy of Good and Evil," "The Man Born to be Hanged," and "Danger." (17)

HUXLEY, ALDOUS

Along the Road

Notes and essays of a tourist. Divided into "Travel in General," "Places," "Works of Art," and "By the Way." (4)

JEFFERIES, RICHARD

Nature Near London

Including: "Footpaths," "A London Trout," "The River," "Trees About Town," etc. (116)

The Life of the Fields

Including: "The Pageant of Summer," "Nature near Brighton," "Village Miners," etc. (115)

The Open Air

Including: "The Modern Thames," "Beauty in the Country," "On the London Road," etc. (114)

JUNGER, ERNST

The Storm of Steel

A narrative of the War on the Western Front, as seen by a German front-line officer. Mr. Lloyd George has recorded his opinion that it is the best record of the actual fighting he has read. (57)

KNOX, E. V.

Humorous Verse : an Anthology

Selected by the present Editor of Punch. (77)

LEHMANN, ROSAMOND

Dusty Answer

This novel of post-war Cambridge was praised on its first appearance by many eminent critics, and has retained its popularity ever since. (50)

LEWIS, WYNDHAM

Tarr

Mr. Wyndham Lewis's distinguished novel, long recognized as a landmark in contemporary fiction. (27)

LEYEL, Mrs. C. F., and Miss OLGA

HARTLEY

The Gentle Art of Cookery

Containing 750 original and delightful recipes. (38)

MILNE, A. A.

First Plays

Containing: "The Boy Comes Home," "Belinda,"

"Wurzel Flummery," "The Lucky One," and "The Red Feathers." (10)

Second Plays

Containing: "Mr. Pim Passes By," "The Romantic Age," "Make Believe," "The Camberley Triangle," and "The Stepmother." (19)

Three Plays

Containing: "The Great Broxopp," "The Dover Road," and "The Truth About Blayds." (30)

Four Plays

Containing: "Ariadne (or Business First)," "To Have the Honour," "Success," and "Portrait of a Gentleman in Slippers." (40)

MONRO, HAROLD

Twentieth Century Poetry : an Anthology

One of the most popular anthologies of modern poetry, now in its 7th impression. (48)

MONTAGUE, C. E.

Action

Stories. (55)

Disenchantment

A searching and memorable analysis of the War, written from the point of view of the average Englishman. (13)

Dramatic Values

Essays on the Drama. (76)

Fiery Particles

Stories. (9)

The Right Place

A highly individual book of holiday pleasures. (20)

Rough Justice

Containing, as it does, some of Montague's finest prose, "Rough Justice" is easily his best known novel. It is a magnificent picture of the generation who served in the War. (39)

A Writer's Notes on his Trade

An invaluable book for any aspiring writer, giving real insight into the structure and variety of good writing. (72)

MOTTRAM, R. H.

The Spanish Farm

This novel is the first in Mr. Mottram's "The Spanish Farm Trilogy" 1914-1918. It was awarded the Hawthornden Prize, and contains a preface by John Galsworthy. Madeleine Vanderlynden, the heroine, is one of the most quoted characters in the whole literature of the War. (53)

Ten Years Ago

A pendant to "The Spanish Farm Trilogy." (60)

OWEN, WILFRED

Poems

Edited by Edmund Blunden. There is no fiercer indictment of war than these superb poems, written by a subaltern of the Manchester Regiment, who was killed in action in 1918 at the Sambre Canal, aged 25. (87)

PARSONS, I. M.

The Progress of Poetry

An anthology of verse from Hardy to the present day. With an Introduction by the Editor. (117)

PATMORE, COVENTRY

Selected Poems

Edited by Derek Patmore. (67)

POWYS, T. F.

The House with the Echo

Stories. (31)

Mr. Tasker's Gods

A novel. Next to "Mr. Weston's Good Wine," this is probably Mr. Powys' best known story, although it is an early one. (46)

Mr. Weston's Good Wine

This story was originally published in a limited edition, which was sold out at publication. In the Phoenix Library it has proved itself to be by far the most popular of all the author's books. It has been praised in print by a Prime Minister; and in the opinion of the author of "Fiction and the Reading Public" it is one of the few significant works of fiction of the age. (23)

No Painted Plumage

Formerly issued under the title "Fables." (61)

PROUST, MARCEL

Swann's Way (2 Vols.) (32/3)

Within a Budding Grove (2 Vols.) (43/4)

The Guermites Way (2 Vols.) (62/3)

Cities of the Plain (2 Vols.) (108/9)

C. K. Scott Moncrieff's version of Proust's great novel is admitted to be the principal triumph of modern translating. There was at one time a fashion in Paris to read Proust in the English edition. No greater compliment to a translator is possible. Of the countless tributes to Proust's art, Joseph Conrad's is one of the most gracious. "I don't think there has ever been in the whole of literature such an example of the power of analysis, and I feel pretty safe in saying that there will never be another."

ROLFE, Fr. ('Baron Corvo')

Don Tarquinio

A novel. (47)

Hadrian VII

This is Rolfe's best known novel, a masterpiece in the bizarre, and the subject of an excellent analysis in Mr. A. J. A. Symons' biography of Rolfe. (37)

ROS, AMANDA M.

Delina Delaney

This novel is the masterpiece of the author whom Mr. Aldous Huxley aptly described as "an Elizabethan born out of her time." (111)

SAMPSON, JOHN

The Wind on the Heath

A Gypsy Anthology, illustrated with drawings by J Garside. A storehouse of Romany literature and lore.

SHCHEDRIN (M. E. Saltykov)

Fables

Russian fables, translated by Vera Volkhovsky. (70)

STENDHAL (Henri Beyle)

The Charterhouse of Parma

C. K. Scott Moncrieff's translation of the magnificent novel so admired by Tolstoy, who said that Stendhal's description of Waterloo in this book first taught him to understand war. This edition is of well over 600 pages. (65)

STRACHEY, LYTTON

Books and Characters

Essays on writers, French and English. (8)

Characters and Commentaries

Literary studies including a fascinating series on the English Letter Writers. (110)

Elizabeth and Essex

Apart from "Queen Victoria," this is Strachey's most popular and best known biography. Queen Elizabeth emerges from its pages a living creature, while it contains one of the few convincing portraits not only of Essex but also of Sir Francis Bacon. (82)

Eminent Victorians

This book, which appeared first at the end of the War, when men's minds were occupied with other matters, gradually became not only the most popular of biographical books, but revolutionized the whole technique of biographical writing. It contains studies of Cardinal Manning, Florence Nightingale, Dr. Arnold, and General Gordon. (2)

Portraits in Miniature

Containing essays on six English historians and major celebrities, French and English, such as John Aubrey, James Boswell, and Madame de Sévigné's cousin. (84)

Queen Victoria

The first volume in the Phoenix Library, and still the leading biography of modern times. It was awarded the James Tait Black Memorial Prize in 1922, and has been a "best seller" for more than a dozen years. (1)

TRINDBERG, AUGUST

Tales

Translated by L. J. Potts. These folk tales and fantasies have a freshness and charm completely without the grimness which is evident in some of Strindberg's plays. (56)

ULLIVAN, J. W. N.

Limitations of Science

A general account, addressed to the lay reader, of the ground so far gained by scientific discovery. (96)

TSCHEHOV, ANTON

The Cherry Orchard

Plays, including "The Cherry Orchard," "Uncle Vanya," "The Sea-Gull," "The Bear," and "The Proposal." (104)

Three Sisters

Plays, including "Three Sisters," "Ivanov," "A Swan Song," "An Unwilling Martyr," "The Anniversary," "On the High Road," and "The Wedding." (103)

TURNER, W. J.

Eighteenth Century Poetry

An Anthology. (69)

VARNER, SYLVIA TOWNSEND

Lolly Willowes

This enchanting story concerns a certain spinster lady who turned into a witch. Besides being an excellent fantasy, it contains some of the best writing that even Miss Townsend Warner has produced. (24)

Other titles are in active preparation

THE CENTAUR LIBRARY

Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d. net per volume

RICHARD ALDINGTON

- 35 The Colonel's Daughter
- 24 Death of a Hero
- 20 Roads to Glory
- 52 Soft Answers
- 74 Women Must Work

ADRIAN ALINGTON

- 71 Ann and Aurelia
- 37 The Career of Julian
Stanley-Williams
- 54 Chaytor's
- 81 Donaldson
- 46 Mr. Jubenka
- 14 Slowbags and Arethusia

JAMES ASTON

- 65 First Lesson
- 64 They Winter Abroad

CLIVE BELL

- 10 Civilization

ARNOLD BENNETT

- 21 Three Plays

ANN BRIDGE

- 73 The Ginger Griffin
- 82 Illyrian Spring
- 56 Peking Picnic

PETER CHAMBERLAIN

- 84 What the Sweet Hell?

G. K. CHESTERTON

- 5 The Return of Don Quixote

NORMAN DOUGLAS

- 33 They Went

WILLIAM FAULKNER

- 77 Pylon
- 47 Sartoris
- 28 Soldiers' Pay
- 42 The Sound and the Fury

H. W. FREEMAN

- 8 Down in the Valley
- 58 Fathers of their People
- 2 Joseph and his Brethren
- 59 Pond Hall's Progress

DAVID GARNETT

- 22 Go She Must

JAMES HANLEY

- 86 Stoker Bush

RICHARD HUGHES

- 1 A High Wind in January
- 23 A Moment of Time

MARGARET IRWIN

- 6 None So Pretty

DENNIS KINCAID

- 68 Cactus Land
- 57 Durbar
- 87 Tropic Rome

ELISSA LANDI

- 48 House for Sale

ROSAMOND LEHMANN

- 43 Dusty Answer
- 51 Invitation to the Waltz

WYNDHAM LEWIS

- 32 The Wild Body

D. M. LOW

- 88 This Sweet Work
- 83 Twice Shy

F. L. LUCAS

- 25 Cécile

SARAH GERTRUDE

- MILLIN
- 79 Three Men Die

C. E. MONTAGUE

- 36 Action
17 Right Off the Map
13 Rough Justice

R. H. MOTTRAM

- 76 The Banquet
12 The Boroughmonger
49 Castle Island
29 The English Miss
39 Europa's Beast
91 The Headless Hound
70 Home for the Holidays
60 The Lame Dog
11 Our Mr. Dormer

DAPHNE MUIR

- 63 Barbaloot
67 The Lost Crusade
69 A Virtuous Woman

BEVERLEY NICHOLS

- 44 Patchwork
9 Prelude
45 Self

CLAUDIA PARSONS

- 78 Brighter Bondage

T. F. POWYS

- 61 Innocent Birds
62 Kindness in a Corner
40 The Left Leg
66 Mockery Gap
50 Unclay
72 The White Paternoster
80 The Two Thieves

V. S. PRITCHETT

- 89 Nothing Like Leather

H. S. REID

- 18 Phillida

SYLVIA TOWNSEND

- WARNER
75 The Salutation
31 The True Heart

CATHARINE WHITCOMB

- 90 I'll Mourn You Later

JAKE WYNNE

- 85 Ugly Brew

THE PHOENIX LIBRARY
OF FOOD AND DRINK

Small cr. 8vo. Uniform. 3s. 6d. net

EDWARD BUNYARD

- 1 The Anatomy of Dessert

PAUL DE CASSAGNAC

- 2 French Wines

FLORENCE COWLES

- 4 Five Hundred Sandwiches

ELIZABETH LUCAS

- 6 A Pretty Kettle of Fish

C. & M. DE SCHUMACHER

- 3 Cook's Tour of European Kitchens

CORAL SMITH

- 5 New Dishes from Left-Overs

Other titles are in active preparation

THE GOLDEN LIBRARY

Large Cr. 8vo. 5s. net per volume

- |                                    |                           |
|------------------------------------|---------------------------|
| J. R. ACKERLEY                     | ALDOUS HUXLEY             |
| 15 Hindoo Holiday                  | 9 Beyond the Mexique Bay  |
| RICHARD ALDINGTON                  | 2 Jestling Pilate         |
| 4 Death of a Hero                  | JULIAN HUXLEY             |
| CLIVE BELL                         | 6 Africa View             |
| 8 An Account of FrenchPainting | MARGARET IRWIN            |
| DAVID BONE                         | 1 The Proud Servant       |
| 13 Merchantmen-at-Arms             | 7 Royal Flush             |
| CATHERINE CARSWELL                 | ANNE MORROW               |
| 12 The Life of Robert Burns        | LINDBERGH                 |
| JOANNA FIELD                       | 18 North to the Orient    |
| 5 A Life of One's Own              | SARAH GERTRUDEMILLIN  |
| ANGUS GRAHAM                       | 3 Rhodes                  |
| 14 The Golden Grindstone           | MAURICE O'SULLIVAN        |
| JAMES HANLEY                       | 10 Twenty Years A-Growing |
| 16 The Furies                      | FREDERIC PROKOSCH         |
|                                    | 17 The Asiatics           |
|                                    | LYTTON STRACHEY           |
|                                    | 11 Elizabeth and Essex    |

Other titles are in active preparation

UNIFORM EDITIONS

Cr. 8vo.

- |                             |   |
|-----------------------------|---|
| ALDOUS HUXLEY               | LYTTON STRACHEY   |
| Brave New World             | Queen Victoria  |
| Point Counter Point*        | Eminent Victorians  |
| Antic Hay                   | Elizabeth and Essex   |
| Crome Yellow                | Books and Characters  |
| Those Barren Leaves         | Characters and Commentaries   |
|                             | Portraits in Miniature  |
| 3s. 6d. net per vol. | The above 6 vols. are issuedtogether boxed at 30s. the set. |
| *5s. net                    |   |

